Professionals offer help with tax returns to students

Tax woes? Having problems or questions filling out your tax forms, the Kansas Department of Revenue is extending its office hours until 9 p.m. You can call them at (913) 296-0222 or their 24-hour service at 1-800-259-2829.

LAST-MINUTE FILERS NEED to heed midnight deadline.

State and federal income taxes must be postmarked by midnight tonight.

Carolyn Schluck, who prepares income taxes at H&R Block, said students who do their own taxes should consider getting professional help.

"They can have the assurance that it's being properly done," she said. "With a professional, they are assured that the right questions are being asked."

Schluck said students should be careful to not leave important information out when filing their taxes.

"One thing students may not know is to report scholarships or grants that weren't used for tuition and books," she said.

Schluck said people can still file extensions. However, extension forms must be postmarked by midnight as well.

"An extension gives them until Aug. 15 to complete their taxes," Schluck said.

Schluck said the time for a refund to be returned varies depending on how students file their taxes. People who use Telefile should receive refunds within three weeks. But individuals using standard forms might have to wait longer.

"If students haven't received a refund within six to eight weeks, they might want to call the IRS," Schluck said.

Although, some students will be receiving refunds, most agree completing tax forms is a hassle.

'Taxes are like calculus. Any way you look at it, it sucks," Mike Doherty, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

Earl Zweifel, sophomore in architectural engineering, said there were good and bad points about paying taxes.

Woods triumphs 50 years after Robinson's feat

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - With symmetry so perfect it almost seemed planned, the 50th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's major league debut will be celebrated Tuesday, two days after Tiger Woods became the first black to win the Masters golf championship. Robinson would have gotten a kick out of Woods' trailblazing triumph because he loved golf and cherished equality.

And 50 years after he pushed baseball into racial reality, a season of tributes reaches its apex at Shea Stadium when Tuesday night's game between the New York Mets and Los Angeles Dodgers is halted in the fifth inning for ceremonies led by President Clinton.

In a letter to readers of the New York Daily News, Clinton saluted baseball's first black "With grace and steely determination, he pushed open a door that should never have been closed and held it open for the countless talented young men and women who followed him," the president wrote.

Hank Aaron, baseball's home run king, who suffered much of the racial abuse as he pursued Babe Ruth's record that Robinson faced before him, put it more simply:

"Without Jackie Robinson," he said, "there wouldn't have been any Hank Aaron."

Or Willie Mays. Or Bob Gibson. Or Ernie Banks. Or any of the scores of other black stars who changed the pace and pulse of the game after Robinson led the way. On Monday, a five-mile stretch of New York City's Interboro Parkway that runs past Cypress Hills Cemetery, where Robinson is buried, was to be renamed for the pioneer who integrated baseball a half-century ago. A proposal to rename Shea for Robinson will be considered by the City Council. The Simon Wiesenthal Center's Museum of Tolerance is presenting an exhibit honoring Robinson that will tour stadiums starting at Shea on Tuesday and will be at the All-Star game in Cleveland in July. The first pitch Tuesday night will be thrown out by Jesse Simms, Robinson's grandson, who will play football at UCLA this fall, the way his grandfather did before moving on to revolutionize baseball.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig and Rachel Robinson, Jackie's widow, will join Clinton at the ceremonies. Earlier this month, Rachel Robinson was at Long Island University's three-day symposium in tribute to her husband and expressed some concerns.

"As people discuss Jack, it's often as a martyr," she said. "They overlook the joys he had, the exhilaration of winning, the joys of his children and his home. Think of the total man, not just in terms of integrating sports."

THE LATHAM FAMILY has had at least one member of the family attending K-State for the last ten years, and is expecting possibly another nine to 10 years before K-State doesn't have a Latham attending. The Lathams currently at home: (Clockwise from top left) John, Andrew, Kathleen, Del, Mark, Joe, Tom, and his wife Anne Marie.

Latham family carries Cat spirit through for 10 years

Latham family home is appropriate for reasons that go beyond symbolic Wildcat support. There has been a Latham on campus every year for the past 10 years.

Originally from Wisconsin, Del Latham said he has always been a country boy at heart. Living in Long Island made Latham want a small-town way of life. He said was able to find that in St. Marys.

"The town we live in, I really like," Del Latham said. "I've been on the planning commission, and president of the chamber of commerce, and worked with the EMS office. It's a great place to work."

Since their move, the Lathams have become loyal K-State supporters. Five of their children have either attended K-State or are now doing so. Del Latham said he expects the youngest two to follow suit. This could draw the tradition out to 19 or 20 years of a continuous Latham family representative on campus

"There's something different about K-State that we haven't seen anywhere else, and we have seen many universities," Del Latham almost a family-type feeling here, and at the same time, very professional, high level."

The combined efforts of Del Latham and his wife, Anne Marie, have served to keep the unity of their family intact.

"We just work to do things together. As parents, we've always attended all the activities of our children. When we want them to do something with us, it's natural for them," Del Latham said.

All the Latham children lived at home while attending college. Their reasons went beyond the economics of room and board.

"It wasn't a matter of cost. (It was) because of family togetherness," Del Latham Twins Mark and Tom Latham will graduate in May. They agreed living at home was

"We all just ended up living at home because it was a really, really nice situation," Tom Latham said.

Mark Latham said he prefers the laidback atmosphere of home during free time. Driving to Manhattan on a Friday or Saturday he K-State flag flying outside the said. "There's a friendliness, a cohesiveness, night is always an option, but it's usually with brothers, girlfriends or wives, they said. Having three other brothers at K-State at one time made it easy to stay together on campus as well. The Lathams had what they considered their own family table in the Union Stateroom. "All four of us were sitting there one time, just talking like brothers do - saying things so bizarre and strange," Tom Latham said. "A friend of my oldest brother said 'You guys sure know each other pretty well. Are you all in the same house?" meaning fraternity. We were about to say no, but then we looked at each other and said 'Yeah, we're all in the same house. We're brothers."

Getting to campus took some planning for the Lathams. Almost every evening before classes, they would meet to decide who was going, at what time and with what

"There would be different combinations of twos or threes going in. It was just so complicated," Tom Latham said.

Practical jokes were common among the brothers when it came to the car they used.

"It was an older, brown station wagon. It had a wood panel on the side, so we called it the woody," Mark Latham said. "We all had keys to that car. A lot of times, at the end of the day, we would see the station wagon, and my brothers or I would park it really crooked or close to another car. One time I came out to the station wagon and saw it sticking way out, and the cars were having to swerve around it."

Picking up where his boys left off, Del Latham is in his first semester as a graduate student at K-State. He said he wanted to gain a level of higher education to assist him in caring for the elderly. Taking his degree a few hours at a time, he said he hopes to eventually speak on geriatric issues in the future.

Finding his experience at K-State an enlightening one, Del Latham gives a lot of credit to his professor, Rick Scheidt.

"I don't know as I've found a more devoted teacher that really knows what he's teaching. It's incredible - after all the courses I've taken throughout the years, I don't think I've ever met anyone who's that prepared to teach," he said.

E-mail chain letters waste users' time, disk space

JOHN HENDERSON

E-mail chain letters that instruct the receiver to send the message on to five more people might appear harmless, but are actually wasteful, according to Harvard Townsend, UNIX network systems manager for K-State.

"They use up resources, waste time and, in some cases, can lead to illegal activities, he said.

These chain letters are just one of several forms of Internet abuse and are the cause for many headaches for those in charge of maintaining the systems. Internet users should learn to avoid following the directions of chain letters and instead work with their administrators to correct the problem, Townsend said.

Roughly, chain letters come in two forms, he said. One urges users to send copies of the mail to friends for some innocuous reason, such as good luck, he "These aren't illegal," he said, "but they're against policy. It works like this: Imagine the first recipient mailing 10 friends. Each in the second group then mails 10 friends. In just three rounds of mailings, 101 people have received the same mail.

The authors of K-State's policies on network services consider this wasteful, Townsend said, as do a growing number of other Internet service providers.

There are four main wastes chain letters represent, he said. One is disk space. All emails have to be stored on computer disks somewhere. That space could be taken up by more useful mail

Another waste is network bandwidth. Computers linked via the Internet use bandwidth on phone lines like plumbing. The more data being sent along telephone lines, the harder it is for other data to flow where it needs to go.

Yet another waste is computer processor horsepower. The more devoted to sending useless mail messages, the slower the horse will run, he said.

The fourth waste, according to Townsend, is time. If an Internet user wants to complain about receiving the mail, that takes time. The administrators of the offending site, expected to deal with the problem, end up wasting their time. Even if an Internet user wants to delete the e-mail, the few seconds add up over tens and hundreds

The other form of chain letter, according to Townsend, is the type that asks that, say, five dollars be sent to 10 other people along with the mail. This form, known commonly as Make Money Fast, or MMF, is illegal.

The United States Postal Service considers requests of money or other valuable

TAINTED STRAWBERRIES NOT CONFIRMED IN MANHATTAN.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has not confirmed Hepatitis-tainted strawberries in Kansas.

Greg Crawford, public information officer for the KDHE, said the presence of contaminated berries in the state was only suspected.

Strawberries that are among the same lot number as those found in Michigan, where there was a hepatitis A outbreak among school children, were sent to Kansas distributors, including one in Manhattan. However, that does not mean that the strawberries in Kansas are tainted with hepatitis A.

However, Steve Saroff, owner of Saroff and Co., said he knows he did not receive any tainted berries.

He said only a small percentage of the berries were contaminated, Saroff said he sold out of the berries from the suspected lots in early March, and there were no reports of hepatitis A.

"The brand I've got now is from a different shipper, packer and broker. I've been selling those since March 1," Saroff said.

Crawford said there was no reliable testing method to detect hepatitis A.

The strawberries were Andrew and Williamson brand strawberries. They were shipped to Packer's Food Products Inc. between summer 1996 and December 1996. Packer's Food Products

Multi-plex theater planned for mall area

BRANDON ROMBERGER

If you want to go to a movie but hate driving to Seth Child Cinema or Westloop 6 Theatres, your problems will soon be over.

The east side of Manhattan will be getting movie theaters as soon as September or October.

First International Theaters has announced plans to build a four-screen multiplex next to Sears at the Manhattan Town Center. First International Theaters also owns all the other theaters in Manhattan.

Tracy Anderson, head architect for the site, said the theaters will be equipped with state-ofthe-art sound systems like the Seth Child

Anderson said two of the theaters will have the same seating capacity, one of the theaters will have extra seating capacity, and the fourth one will have less capacity.

He said First International liked what it saw in "The owners wanted to put another theater in Manhattan. It's a good market. They felt it is a place big enough to handle the theaters," Anderson said. Mall manager Chris Heavey said he likes the opportunities the theater presents.

"I think it will give people another reason to come to the center," he said.

He said they are using it as an entertainment

"We think it will be quite profitable," he said. Heavey said this completes a long process that goes back to when the mall was first built.

'We couldn't decide if we wanted to build a theater, and in our haste, First International bought the land on the west side. It really was a matter of bad timing," he said.

The start of construction is planned for the beginning of summer with the date of completion scheduled for mid-September or early October.

Research shows abuse affects college students

The sentimental vase given as an anniversary gift lies in a pile of rubble. The crying woman holds her swollen cheek while her boyfriend ends the argument with a slam of the front door.

According to the American Bar Association on Domestic Violence, domestic violence occurs when spouses, intimate partners or dates use physical abuse, threats, emotional abuse, harassment or stalking to control the behavior of their partners.

Judy Davis, director of the K-State Crisis Center, said that according to a nationwide campus study, on a campus of 20,000 students, 800 will experience a violent relationship

"In studies of domestic violence on college campuses across the nation, the results are sobering," she said. "These studies are generalized to the population in terms of trends and challenges that faces a campus like K-State."

Dorinda Lambert, assistant director of clinical services at University Counseling Services, said intimate violence occurs at

"There are certainly people involved in violent situations from verbal threats to being hit," she said.

Davis said the behavior that constitutes domestic violence is out there among students and evidence supports the fact that it occurs among couples dating at K-State.

"I want to help people become aware of the propensity related to domestic violence," she said. "There are some red flags of behavior that are indicators of future violence."

Davis said there are many symptoms that can escalate to violent behavior. One is aggressive behavior, where feelings of anger or hurt are expressed by destroying property of sentimental value. Another is physical coercion of restraint, where individuals refuse to allow their partner to leave a situation.

Davis said anyone who is willing to physically restrain you is also capable of violence.

"Those are certainly danger signs," she said. "That doesn't mean it's necessarily domestic violence, but it gives us the chance to see the possibility of it coming and take steps before situations of violence occur."

Davis said once someone crosses the barrier where raised voices escalate to physical violence, the frequency and severity of abuse usually increases.

"A slap becomes a closed fist or a choke, or you may get thrown down a flight of stairs," she said. "Once the relationship crosses into physical intimidation of any form, there is no safety To many victims, the act of domestic violence is often viewed as the end of a dispute, but Davis said the violent act marks the beginning of recovery. However, the biggest challenge for victims is to ask someone for help, Davis said. Lambert agreed asking for help is difficult. She said sometimes it takes a long time before people are willing to get help.

"There is probably a lot more going on in the community than is represented by the small proportion of people who get into a counseling setting," Lambert said. "I certainly hope individuals seek help sooner to gain assistance with problems."

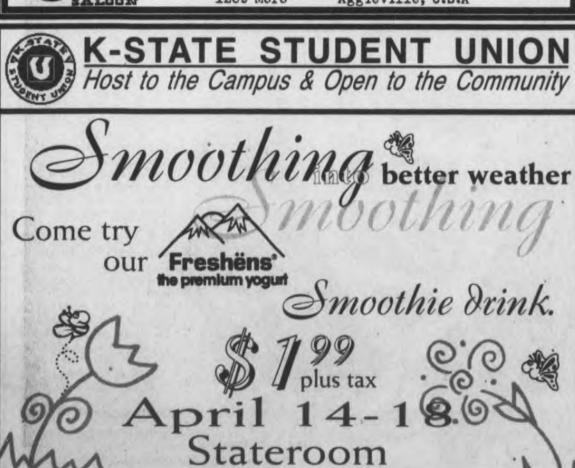

Davis said victims are reluctant when reporting acts of abuse and violence in the relationship because there is always the inclination to protect your partner. "When you're emotionally involved with someone, you want to protect them," Davis said. "It's hard to bring those matters to an

Options exist for income tax deadline procrastinators t's been said there are only two things you can count on:

If you've waited until the last minute to file your income taxes, you're like many other Americans, so don't feel bad. You've simply procrastinated until today and need to get it into the mail before it's too late.

But there are a few things you might want to know.

You can pick up tax forms at the K-State EDITORIAL BOARD Student Union, Farrell Library or any Dillons store in Manhattan. You'll need these forms to EDITOR IN CHIEF

> If you have trouble filling these forms out, the Kansas Department of Revenue is extending its tax assistance office hours until 9 tonight. You can call them at (913) 296-0222.

> However, the office suggests most questions can be answered by calling the 24-hour Tel-Assist phone line at 1-800-259-2829. This is an automated service that gives general information. It also explains what you can do if you don't think you'll meet tonight's deadline and need to file an extension.

You can also check out tax information on the Internet at (http://www.irs.ustreas. gov/plain/tax_edu/teletax/tc803.html).

While you have all of your tax information spread out on your floor, you might as well find a large envelope to stick it in when you are finished. Write "Taxes 1996" on the outside and keep it for between five and 10 years in case you are ever audited or if inquiries need to be made about your records.

Filling out your own taxes might be tedious, but it's a rite of passage from being a non-voting kid to becoming a tax-paying adult.

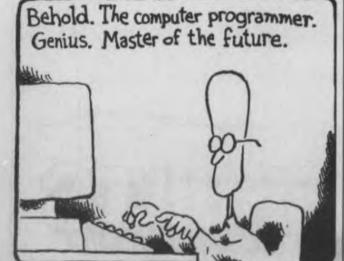

Anyway, with any luck in this year's Legislature, we'll be paying less taxes next year.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

ments to Jess at (Jess31@ksu.edu).

I knew a guy in high school who strapped on a short, tight, pink summer dress and put on lipstick, eye shadow and clip-on earrings. We drove him to the only cruising strip Olathe had to offer.

He stood there with his shaved head reflecting the night lights, thumb propped in the air as his dress stuck to his hairy legs.

Let me tell you, it was hours of entertainment. A guy named Albert who was driving a black 1972 Ford pickup even went so far as to proposition

My friend did all this for five bucks. Yep, five one-dollar bills. That's only 20 quarters. The ghastly thing was no one offered him any cash.

Once again, what would you do for money? It's a rather dangerous question, isn't it?

For $55 million would you burn a library? Would you bomb a museum void of humans? Would you deprive yourself of any television or cinema for the rest of your life?

All these questions break down to your personal code of ethics.

Unfortunately, I can't think of a whole lot I wouldn't do for money. Perhaps this is because I lack in any sense of morality (that was sarcasm). I do know I wouldn't harm anyone or myself for any amount of cash. Anything beyond that is open to discussion. However, I wasn't always so corruptible.

Once upon a time, when I began attending this purple-laden institution, money had little if any significance in the world according to Jess. Life was about broadening the mind and enriching life with thought.

This was obviously because I was still blinded by the old parental income. Without free rent, free laundry and all the other benefits of home, I quickly learned that to wade through this Homo sapien drenched Earth, one must possess cold, hard cash.

But it's not my fault I have grown to want and need money.

I blame it on the world around me.

This entire country, this continent and this planet all revolve around paper and shiny metal.

The only difference between a dollar bill and the paper you are holding at this instant is the fact that we're told the government-backed paper is

If I told you the Collegian you're holding is worth $200, you would laugh your tush off.

More often than not, countries fight wars about money. Humans die for paper and metal found in the earth. We seldom fight wars about ideology. When did all this madness commence?

History would tell us the human race evolved to a money-based system because of the arduous effort humans had to put forth in the barter system. I can see a half-truth to that thought, but I don't buy it. Governments had to get their hands in the pot, so with governments came money I'm not suggesting we revert to the barter system. What I'm saying is that we should institute complete anarchy. Let's take a moment to imagine, shall we? That was ugly. I saw people looting, shooting, stealing and killing one another all in a mad dash to obtain as many worldly goods as possible. This fictitious melee I've just conceived reminds me that with money comes Goods - namely goods that fall under the want, not need, category - drive humans to do strange things. People get shot for their shoes in this world. It's absolute lunacy.

We act as though money and material objects can make this lightning bolt we call life burn a little longer. That mode of thought is blindingly false. The only conclusion I keep coming up with is that money is the fountainhead of all the wickedness this world

The important thing to do is to avoid placing our happiness in money and material objects. The cliché "time is money and money is time" stinks like a skunk spraying the walls of your bathroom. If you'll excuse me I'm going to go change my major to a more lucrative field so I can own a house on the French Riviera, a yacht and the guy who draws the cartoon "Dilbert."

I figure if I can pay him enough, he will make me laugh. That was more sarcasm, in case you couldn't tell.

The cloning debate has finally died down to a dull roar. It is now time to think about what genetic technology involves and what the ethical implications are, rather than listening to media-tamed scientists and bioethicists label human cloning

In spite of the ethical prohibitions that reputable scientists have imposed upon themselves, human cloning will become a reality. Someone will do it one way or another, whether by a National Science Foundation grant, funding from a

But the high cost of these would help hospitals finance first-class gene therapy for disadvantaged people.

We, thus, would fight a holding action and so maintain the present health-care system, flawed as it is, rather than be overrun by the tall, athletic, sexually tireless, picture-perfect blond beasts that would be created by an eugenics program.

The guiding principle of democratic society — that nobody be denied opportunity on the basis of circumstance rather than his or her actions - would be preserved. In fact, most states have already made a bold start by explicitly prohibiting health insurance companies from writing insurance using genetic ed for the sole convenience of the original.

(f.) Any imprisoned felon forfeits his right to be duplicated. Strict enforcement of these principles and improvements in infant registration would prevent needless complication of law enforcement, which might otherwise become impossible. (Imagine a perpetrator with numberless duplicates.)

Eugenics supplies a classic example of genetic engineering used to produce human misery and suffering rather than to raise or preserve the human condition.

When put into practice, it not only unfairly selects people according to inborn traits, but also drives out research interest in genemodification techniques, which might help others born with imperfect genes.

It, therefore, cannot be taken as a useful model of applied genetic technology in the ethics debate. To do so would be to judge an innovation only by its evil consequences.

Rather than condemning every advance in genetic technology as a potential threat to human freedom, Congress and the scientific societies should revise their ethics guidelines to encourage application of genetic engineering in ways that uphold democratic values and the informed-consent principle.

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

During his abortive "1,000year Reich," Adolph Hitler implemented his own eugenics scheme using the primitive genetics available in his day. His goal was to multiply the blond, tall Nordic "ubermensch" and so displace the vast majority of the German population that had dark eyes, dark hair, big noses or other deviations from the desired standard. Our technological sophistication, however, frees us from selective breeding and eugenics as the sole means of genetic

For instance, we could in theory make gene treatments into standardized and cheap medical procedures available to a broad range

These would be capable of producing broad physiological improvements such as better lung function, lessened susceptibility to pollutants and better cardiac health.

Because there will always exist demand for well-formed breasts or symmetric faces, cosmetic procedures would inevitably develop in parallel.

• LARAMIE STREET ISSUE REPRESENT- showed up). ED WELL BUT OVERBLOWN Editor.

I'm pleased that you attempted to present a reasonable analysis of the Laramie Street discussion. I would like to mention a couple of things that stood out to me, how-

1. The map published with the article was atrocious, having at least three obvious errors. They include:

a. Fairchild Street does not continue across 14th Street, it ends there. On the other side of 14th, you can get to Fremont Street, but only by jogging south a little. Seems like a small point, but that area is one of the most dangerous in this part of

b. Leavenworth Street does not continue through the City Park, but only takes up again on the other side of the park, at 11th Street.

c. The KSU Continuing Education Building is not where you've shown it on the map; it's on the west side of 16th Street. The area you've indicated is a parking lot in front of the K-State Credit Union.

I guess I wouldn't even bother to mention these, but they all impact the reader's view of what the traffic flow in this area might be like and so are disappointingly misleading.

2. Your headline was "Battle for Laramie Street." That seems unnecessarily inflammatory to me. I live in the neighborhood, have been involved in discussions about the proposal, and attended the meeting that was to be about this issue (which was canceled because the room was too small for the many interested people who

COMMISSIONER THANKS SUPPORTERS FOR HELP DURING TERM

As my term of service on the Manhattan City Commission ends today, I want to thank you for granting me the privilege to serve. I am continually indebted to you for your consistent encouragement during the campaign of 1995 and throughout the past two years.

To the voters of Manhattan, I say, "Thank you." It is tremendously humbling to understand the debt of gratitude that I owe you. I understand the leap of faith you took two years ago in electing me to serve on the city commission. I am grateful for those who took the calculated risk of supporting and voting for a younger person in the community — even a fellow student. The responsibility of making public decisions is enormous, and I count myself privileged to have been entrusted with this charge in my hometown of Manhattan.

I thank the taxpayers, parents, students, business owners and interested citizens who have helped me understand the issues affecting them.

Without a doubt, the students on campus recognize that both K-State and Manhattan have changed significantly over the past few years. It has been exciting to work with the city's leadership during this

We have plowed through difficult short-term problems and have made sound, long-term investments for our city. I thank the other commissioners for their partnership. Together, we have made Manhattan

I thank my friends on campus for their patience and encouragement during the past two years. To my generous and understanding friends, to my support base at Tau Kappa Epsilon, to the members of Student Government Association, to the faculty and administration — I hope I have given back to you a portion of what you have given to me.

Thank you for the honor of serving on the Manhattan City Commission.

SUBSTANTIAL OPINIONS MEAN MORAL ISSUES FOR STUDENT GROUP

I am writing to clarify a few things in Brandi Hertig's column

After serious study of the pro-life group on the K-State campus, I have come to several conclusions concerning its amount of action and the opinions its

First, some data. KSU Students for the Right to Life sent about half a dozen students to the March for Life in Washington, D.C. The students raised money from bake sales and even used some of their own money to fund the trip.

In Washington, D.C., they met with their representatives and urged them to support pro-life legislation. This week, they planned and funded several speakers to come to our campus and talk about abortion. Many of the women in the group work at crisis pregnancy centers around Manhattan

Why do these pro-lifers chalk sidewalks, hold signs at rallies, help at pregnancy centers and just speak to people about abortion and unborn babies?

One reason they give is that if just one baby is spared, all that effort and all that talk will not have been useless

There is also another strange observation. It seems that pro-lifers don't actually think that abortion is an issue where you just have an opinion.

They seem to think this is an issue with moral ramifications not an issue about personal opinions.

PROFESSOR THANKS STUDENTS FOR OPEN HOUSE EFFORTS

At the end of the 75th KSU Engineering Open House, as department Open House advisor, I want to express my great appreciation for the electrical and computer engineering students who worked so hard to show off our department and our profession.

I came to this job late and unexpectedbecause of Bill Dawes' sudden illness and could never hope to match his energy, enthusiasm and dedication.

But students Don Pearce, Open House chair; and Jamie, Quincy, Samara, Steve and a host of others, did Bill Dawes proud, throwing themselves completely into the displays, the float and all kinds of "atmospherics" I could not have begun to think of.

They received very little reward for all their energy and hard work - personal satisfaction at a job well done, but no more.

I want to publicly tell all of them, and Shelli Starrett too, who helped with research and typing for the Historical Display, that they did an excellent job, beyond what anyone could have expected, and I think Dawes, from where he is, must be awfully proud too.

Many, many thanks!

JESUS'S WORK IS IMPORTANT TO EVERYONE Editor.

This is in response to Khalid Kebbati's column in Thursday's Collegian.

I would like to thank Kebbatti for an intelligently written and informative column on the Muslim view of Jesus.

First, let me say that I am a Christian. The reader might interpret that statement as he or she will, but, to me, it means essentially that I look to Jesus and his teachings as a guide for living my own life on this earth and beyond, and, by doing so, he is my savior.

The idea that jumped out at me most was his discussion of the Trinity. This concept of the Trinity is very significant in the Christian faith and hotly debated inside and out. My take on the concept of the Trinity is that it is a model, or analogy if you will, to describe the unique relationship between God, Jesus and God's spirit that moves in and among human beings.

Jesus was not silent about this matter. After being referred to as "good teacher," Jesus responded by saying "Why are you calling me good? Only God is good." (Mark 10:18). Elsewhere, he refers to himself as a door to God (John 10:7), and as being "One with the Father" (John 10:30).

C.S. Lewis, a Christian and Oxford scholar, once wrote that anyone who says such things must be either insane or telling the truth. There seems to be no middle ground with such statements. To me, Jesus's actions back up his words as no other who make such claims can.

Jesus was (and is) a prophet, teacher, healer and servant. To some, he is savior, master and Lord. To others - all-around nice guy. My point is that after all the discussion, everyone must decide for him or herself who and what Jesus is.

The fact is that Jesus is a man whose life and life's work cannot, and will not, be ignored

"I'm just irritated by people who want to make money by doing no work," Townsend said.

Ramsey said that if a user receives a chain letter, there are several options to choose from. Sometimes just replying to the one who sent the mail will do the trick, he said. "Be polite," he said. "The important thing to say is, 'Don't send me any more mail.' Just send one mail. You don't need to mail bomb them."

If the chain letter comes from K-State, the user can forward the mail to (abuse@ksu.edu), he said.

If the letter seems to come from somewhere else, the user can try forwarding the mail to (abuse@ksu.edu) or postmaster@ (the name of the site). Townsend said users from K-State risk losing their Internet privileges if they send chain letters. However, he finds most stop after a warning.

"I've never had a repeat offender," he said. "We just have to educate them. Some might be annoyed by the warning, but they don't do it again.'

Ramsey, who receives an average of 400 e-mails per day, said he would appreciate more users of K-State's network services becoming aware of the policy and knowing how to handle chain letters when they're sent a copy.

"There are just too many people out there spamming," said Ramsey, using the generic term for sending unwanted material via the Internet. "There's not enough time for the good guys to keep

The total man was why Branch Rickey chose Robinson as the centerpiece of his plan to change the face of Robinson's debut on April 15, 1947 was nondescript. He was 0-for-3, struggling against the curve balls of Boston's Johnny Sain. He reached base on an error, scored a run and handled 11 chances at first base flawlessly. And he was pretty much ignored in press reports of the Dodgers' 5-3 victory over the Braves.

It didn't stay that way very long. Bigotry surfaced in short order. An anti-Robinson petition in his own clubhouse was crushed in spring training. But all around the league, there was ugly bench jockeying spiced by racial epithets, a shower of abuse made all the worse because of Robinson's pledge to Rickey that he would not answer it.

He replied on the field with a fiery game that drove other teams to distraction. He ran the bases with abandon, a first-tothird machine. He danced on the basepaths with a hop, skip and jump that maddened pitchers. He stole home 20 times, and that doesn't include the times he trotted in when pitchers lost their concentration and threw the ball past the catcher.

He was a handful.

"I remember, when Jackie was on base the guys in the dugout all wanted to watch," said Clyde King, a Dodgers pitcher in 1947. "I remember Gil Hodges pushing Eddie Miksis out of the way so he could see Jackie on third base.

For two years, Robinson kept his vow of silence. When the restraints came off in 1949, he led the league with a .342 batting average and was the MVP. And he became the leader of a team that won six pennants in his 10 seasons and barely missed two others.

After he retired, Robinson pressed for equality in baseball. Ten days before he died in October 1972, he appeared at the World Series and reminded baseball that it still was dragging its feet when it came to placing blacks in decision-making positions.

Twenty-five years later, eight blacks have ever served as field managers and only two have run clubs as general managers.

"The residue of racism still exists in baseball," Rachel Robinson said. "I'm sure he'd be pleased with the integration factor of players. But the front office and general scheme still don't have equal opportunity. We still don't own any part. He'd be disappointed

DENVER BRONCOS SIGN 5-TIME PRO-BOWL DEFENSIVE END NEIL SMITH

The Denver Broncos on Monday signed five-time Pro Bowl defensive end Neil Smith to a one-year contract. Smith ranks as one of the top sack artists in the NFL with 86 in his career. Denver offered Smith a deal, which reportedly will pay him between $1 million and $1.5 million in base salary, with incentives that could swell it to $3 million

Columnist offers a few 1st-round predications for upcoming NFL draft

For all of you pathetic, drooling-at-the-mouth NFL junkies, this is the weekend you have been waiting for. I know how to describe all of you because I am the president of this sad, addicted

Hi, my name is Shane McCormick, and I'm addicted to the NFL

This weekend's NFL draft will provide us with a little shot of action that will whet our appetite until the fall.

Some Wildcats will have some interest in this weekend's festivities, too. Cats who have a chance to receive some exciting news this weekend include the following:

 Chris Canty. When Canty got back a pre-draft summary from coaches about his status, he was told he would be somewhere in the top 15.

Many draft publications predict Canty going anywhere from 16 - Tampa Bay - to even early in the second round. Draft Expert Mel Kiper has Canty going early in the second round, somewhere from 31 to 40. Interactive Internet Sports draft guide has Canty going to Pittsburgh at 24 or New England at 29.

Canty's stock has fallen recently because of lack of size and because he hasn't been running as well as scouts would have liked.

I would be very surprised, however, if Canty did not get taken in the first round. I look for Pittsburgh to take him with the 24th pick.

· Kevin Lockett. Lockett's stock began to rise with impressive performances in the Cotton Bowl and in the senior bowl games. In the NFL combines, he wasn't able to post a 40-yard dash time that was below a 4.5 time. But in personal workouts for teams, Lockett did post a 4.4 time that should raise the cycbrows of scouts.

Lockett has tremendous hands, runs routes well and knows the game. Pro Football Weekly said Lockett's main problem is his size, which might cause problems with bump and run coverages.

Another thing that hurts Lockett's stock is that this year's draft is very deep at the receiver's position. If Lockett makes it down to a team in the third round, it will be a tremendous steal.

 Jason Johnson. At 6'2", 275, Pro Football Weekly says he does not have the size to play the offensive line at the pro level. However, reports recently have said that Johnson has put on an extra 15-20 pounds

Johnson is as smart as they come. His understanding of the game is tremendous. He might be undersized, but he found a way to get it done at the college level, and he'll find a way at the pro level. Look for Johnson's name to be called somewhere in the later rounds of the draft.

 Mario Smith. With a 4.8 time in the 40-yard dash, Pro Football Weekly says Smith doesn't have enough speed to cover a slot receiver man-on-man. His big play and big hit potential should be too much for some team to overlook in the late rounds of the draft

Other Cats who could find their way to the professional playing field somewhere include Nyle Wiren, Joe Gordon, DeShawn Fogle and Ross Greenwood Come draft day, here are the top 10 names you should hear.

1. N.Y. Jets. Darrell Russell. Everybody, the Jets are on the clock, watch out! With Bill Parcells at the helm, the Jets won't waste this pick with a tight end. Look for the Jets to bolster a weak defensive line with Russell from USC.

2. Oakland (from New Orleans). Orlando Pace. The Raiders are looking to protect all of that money they gave quarterback Jeff George. The obvious and right choice here is Orlando Pace from Ohio

3. Seattle (from Atlanta). Shawn Springs. The Seahawks are in need of a big-time cornerback with the loss of Carlton Gray. The best at this position this year is Ohio State's Springs. Springs' stock has continued to rise after his workouts.

4. Baltimore. Peter Boulware. It is hard to believe defensive end Boulware lasted this long, but he probably will. This is an obvious and easy choice for the Ravens, who will immediately get help with their pass rush.

5. Detroit, Bryant Westbrook. The Lions have an obvious need for help in the defensive secondary. Westbrook is the next best cornerback in the draft behind Springs.

6. St. Louis. Dwayne Rudd. Rudd is a multidimensional linebacker from Alabama who will have an immediate effect in the NFL. Rudd is the most physical and fastest linebacker in this year's

7. New York Giants. Yatil Green. The Giants are in desperate need for some playmakers on offense. Green is physical and fast for a wide out. He would complement Thomas Lewis in the Giants' scheme.

8. Tampa Bay. Walter Jones. Jones is an athletic, 300-pound lineman who can play the left tackle or guard position. The Bucs might give Warrick Dunn a look but Jones is too talented to pass up.

9. Arizona. James Farrior. This linebacker from Virginia is built in the Darrin Smith mode - fast and athletic

10. New Orleans (from Oakland). Rae Carruth. The Saints are in need of a playmaker on the offensive side of the ball. It has been a while since the Saints have had a game-breaker. Carruth could be this type of player with a 4.17 in the 40-yard dash.

FIRST BASEMAN Jason Bichelmeyer dives to tag a Chicago State runner during a March 20 game. The Wildcats went on to win the game, 12-7.

MICAH ARMBRUSTER

Cats hoping to get into thick of Big 12 race

BRIAN SMOLLER

K-State will face a Jayhawk team at 7 tonight at Frank Myers Field in hopes of turning its slumping season around.

After being swept by the Oklahoma Sooners this past weekend, the Cats are looking for a total change of focus.

"At the beginning of the year, we were trying to win the Big 12 title and the tournament," said first baseman Jason Bichelmeyer, who hit his fifth home run on Saturday, the only Wildcat homer of the series. 'Now we're just trying to make it," he said.

The top six teams in the Big 12 Conference make up the season finale tournament, which is in Oklahoma City, May 15-18. "Now our focus is to be in the top six teams at the end of the season," outfielder Scott Poepard said. "We're only three or four games behind

"We're real streaky. We just hope we can turn it around," he said.

The OU series was originally scheduled to be in Manhattan, but because of the weather, the series was relocated to Tulsa.

"It would've been nice to play here in Manhattan," Bichelmeyer said, "and not have to go through the wear and tear of travel. We would've been in front of the home crowd, and we would've had a little momentum.

The Oklahoma series ended on a bad note, as the Cats dropped a 10-1 decision in the second game of a doubleheader on Sunday. They lost the first game, 5-3

K-State lost the opener on Saturday in a slugfest, 10-7. The Cats had high hopes of getting back into the thick of the Big 12 title race, but the Sooner sweep all but dashed those "I don't think we hit real well. I don't think we pitched real well either," Poepard said. "The whole team is giving effort, but we're just not winning. Despite the three-game setback, which now makes the Cats

1-5 in their last six games, the players want to make it clear that their spirits remain high "I think our attitude is solid," Bichelmeyer said. "Coach's doing a good job keeping our attitude positive."

K-State drops to 22-14 overall, 5-13 in the conference. The Sooners improve to 26-10 overall, 11-4 in the conference.

The Kansas game tonight is the second game of a two-game series. The first game was supposed to be last Tuesday, but it was too cold to play.

The game is scheduled as a non-conference game as the Cats and the Jayhawks will play their Big 12 games in Lawrence, May 2-4.

Even though the Jayhawks come into town as a non-conference opponent, the game is labeled by the players as a starting point for turning around this recent slump.

"We can't be ourselves," Bichelmeyer said. "We can't afford to not challenge hitters. We have to make the other team beat

The starting pitcher for the Cats will be announced at game

After the Jayhawk series, K-State will play host to Texas Tech in Manhattan.

Adverse weather hampers women's crew in regatta

After a two-day delay because of weather, the K-State women's crew finally took to the water on Sunday in the Great Plains Regatta at Lake Shawnee in Topeka

It was supposed to be the biggest and most competitive meet of the year for the women's crew, but the snow and wind made some of the crews

"The delay in the schedule had some effects on our racing," Coach Jenny Hale said. "We learned a lot about racing in strong head wind conditions, and I think the conditions got the best of us.'

Three boats raced for K-State: the varsity eights, the varsity fours and the novice eights in two different boats.

The varsity eights finished third behind KU and Drake in a seven-boat race. The novice A boat, composed entirely of walk-ons who have only been racing for eight weeks, finished second, and the novice B boat finished fourth. All four boats fell to KU, whom they had beaten a week ago. Hale said she was proud of the novice A boat. "They have only been racing for eight weeks, but they executed very well," she said. "For them to get fourth in a race against that tough of competition is absolutely a tremendous effort." For K-State, the race alone wasn't the toughest part, but rather getting used to the unfamiliar conditions.

"There were a lot of outside things that we had to deal with," Stephanie Tweito, rower on the novice eights team, said. "We had to wait for a couple of boats for about an hour when we got down there. There were a lot of extra things we had to deal with besides the weather.' Hale said some good did come out of the race even though she said most of the K-State boats were overpowered in some of the races.

"This-was a mental weekend," Hale said. "We had a lot of things to talk about after the race was over like conditions and wind. This is something that we'll just have to work on in weeks to come.

While such acts show evidence of how far America has come since Jim Crow, Rachel Robinson smartly points out how far America has to go. Today, she says, we must be wary of the covert racism that permeates society in general and sports in specific.

Rachel Robinson cites the racial disparities in managerial and coaching jobs, front office positions and especially ownership of teams. For every Marge Schott who hollers her prejudices from the mountain top, who knows how many owners slip back and forth between their teams' public relations and the old establishment of off-the-field discrimination. Sadly, such speculation will likely taint the festivities today

For fans too young to have witnessed Robinson's career first hand, the 1997 season will shed light on the most influential and extraordinary athlete in our history.

Moreover, we will all recognize it was not only what Jackie Robinson achieved as an athlete, but also what he accomplished as a human being that makes him the greatest hero many Fall into spring.

Fashion is always changing and developing. Year in and year out, seasons come and go, bringing changes in the fashion industry. It's mesmerizing to know that among these seasonal changes of attire, weather is one of the least affecting facwas reading the March edition of Mademoiselle magazine when I noticed an interesting advertisement for wool. Spread across the page, the wool bureau elaborately stated, "Ye Olde Dress Code: Pastels are only for little girls. Wool is only for winter."

"Wool. The rules no longer apply." Seasonless clothes? That's right, darlings, designers are using winter and fall fabrics to dazzle up this spring's fashion additions.

I remember when winters ended and springs began. Leather, corduroy, velvet, wool and suede were stashed far away in closets. But this year, you might want to reconsider your wardrobe.

Although I find that fashion remains seasonal, there are also heirs of effecting styles, no matter what the season or fabric.

After all, would people purposely walk around in bulky snow boots and itchy wool sweaters in the winter if it weren't for the cold? Not I. But weather, among other conditions, requires that we dress appropriately. I've yet to see a K-State student making snow angels in a bikini top and a pair of cut-off shorts.

People continue wearing out-of-season clothes to dress with style.

No one is to say what works and what doesn't work with seasons. It's all about what looks and feels good.

Look at it this way: Not having to spring shop can be a bonus to your bank account. Also, cotton as well as most fall and winter fabrics are wrinkle-free, so ironing is optional. But these factors depend on whether you choose to save gressively throughout the season. Seasonal fashion changes were probably developed by people who thought certain materials and fabrics felt more comfortable, but nothing was ever set in stone. Hey, whoever said you are supposed to ing? Most likely the same people. Give heavy fabrics a try. Vibrant suede jackets, a corduroy halter dress, a less velvet dress are some great examples of creating seasonless style. Keep the colors light or in pastels. I really don't think a black leather jacket would be accessible during the summer.

Whether you're climate-conscious or don't mind beating the heat in a pair of corduroy shorts.

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

it's a funny industry, that fashion. Maybe all this seasonless clothing is just a phase. But the idea of getting away with wearing what we want, regardless of the weather, isn't all that bad.

18th-century play depicts modern theme, story line

RYAN O'HALLORAN

Vanity, egotism and selfishness are all aspects of "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," which will be presented April 17-19 and 23-26 in Nichols Theatre.

And after breaking do of the play, one would think "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" was set in modern times and written by a modern author. But that's where this play is different. The play was written by Choderlos de Laclos in 1782 and is set in the 1780s. Therefore, the customs are from that time period. That's where the 18th-century theme ends

"Our setting is much more minimalisticand abstract," Lewis Shelton, director, said. "We're not calling attention to the time period because it sounds much more contemporary.

Shelton's production will be based on

Christopher Hampton's version that debuted in New York in 1988. That and the late-1980s movie, "Dangerous Liaisons," were both based on the 1782 novel.

The lead female character is Merteil, while the leading man is Valmont.

former lover, so she challenges Valmont to seduce a young woman that this other man wants to marry, so one aspect of the plot is revenge and seduction," Shelton said.

There's another story line, however.

"Valmont has his own seduction of another woman — Madam Touvel — that he's working on," Shelton said. "We have two story lines that come together in the play and reveal the vanity and egotism and selfishness of Merteil and Valmont."

Shelton said the play should hook the audience because private emotions are being put on display, and the story includes several power plays.

we don't like to talk about or admit," he said. "That's why it's a very interesting, compelling and intriguing kind of play.

"It's more about people exercising power and control over each other, and they that," Shelton said.

Shelton has directed more than 40 plays while at K-State. He said this production got his attention because it's always interesting to work with this sort of evil. This is a play that I've been interested in doing since it came out because it is very dramatic," Shelton said. "There's something compelling about people who are as evil as these characters are, and people want to know what makes them tick.

The play was first produced in England in 1985, and on Broadway by Hampton three years later. Both of those productions along with films "Dangerous Liaisons,"

"These are universal emotions, but ones and "Valmont" - were all set in the 1780s, but a French film in the 1960s was set in modern times.

> "I had an idea about doing it that way, but I couldn't convince anyone else of Shelton said he hasn't seen any of the other productions and instructed his actors to not view the movie adaptations.

When you watch the movie, you can get images in your head of how the actors performed it, and sometimes it's hard to get that out of your head and do it originally," he said.

"And if I haven't seen a play when it comes time to produce it, I don't run off and see it because I like to keep the images I got when I read it in my mind."

Tickets for "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" are available at the McCain box office. Prices are $6 for students and seniors, and $9 for the general public.

Air Force: Pilot could have secretly bailed out

EAGLE, Colo. - A pilot who disappeared with an A-10 Thunderbolt jet almost two weeks ago could have disabled an emergency beacon and secretly bailed out over the Rocky Mountains, an Air Force official said Monday.

The possibility that Capt. Craig Button is still alive is one of the issues lending urgency to the search for him and the $9 million jet. Another is that the plane carried four 500-pound bombs.

'We think he was with the aircraft. We're hoping he's still with it and alive," Col. Denver Pletcher said Monday.

Air Force officials initially doubted Button bailed out because the ejection seat automatically sends out a homing beacon. But pilots have the option of switching off the beacon because it sends out a signal that could be intercepted by the enemy in "The pilot could manually disable the ejector seat beacon," Capt. Mike Richmond said.

Button, 32, and his A-10 disappeared April 2 during a practice run in Arizona. Radar data and witness accounts indicate Button broke away from his formation and flew to Colorado - about 800 miles off course - and Air Force officials said they don't know why

Ground and air searches focused Monday on five possible crash sites, reduced from eight that were targeted Sunday in a remote area of the Rockies. The five sites in the area of the 12,500-foot New York Mountain contain irregular shapes, Lt. Gen. Frank Campbell said.

An excursion into three of those sites Monday afternoon revealed little new information, Col. Greg Keethler said. One site could not be reached because it was on a sheer cliff, he said.

The Air Force also planned to look at another site after a prospector told authorities his machinery detected things such as aluminum and iron in an area he knows well, Keethler said.

The search was joined Monday by an SR-71 Blackbird, a spy plane that carries highly sensitive radar and can fly high enough to see the curvature

Air Force investigators have also been looking into Button's background in hopes of finding an explanation for his disappearance. But Campbell said the investigation had found no derogatory evidence about his past.

"There is no evidence there that he is anything but a model U.S. Air Force officer," Campbell said. CNN reported last week that Button appeared depondent after his parents visited him in March. But his family denied that.

The ground searchers braved winds, knee-deep snow and cold temperatures as they continued to scour the mountains southwest of Vail.

"We want to exhaust every possibility that we possibly can," Pletcher said. "We're trying to find something out of the ordinary. You're not looking for an airplane, you're looking for a junkyard."

Red River rises again, brings jitters to wary North Dakota residents

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FARGO, N.D. - The Red River crept up again Monday, edging past the 100-year record set only two days earlier and stirring new jitters for weary residents who thought the flood threat had moved on.

The new crest, fed by bulging tributaries, could keep the river high for days, said city operations manager Dennis Walaker.

"People were almost euphoric thinking the worst was over," Walaker said as he prepared to check the river by helicopter. "I still feel that's the case, but we have to stay alert."

The river rose to 37.71 feet Monday — the highest mark this century - but that was barely higher than Saturday's crest of 37.61 feet. That's about 20 feet above flood stage, but below the top of the dikes protecting the state's largest city and short of the all-time record of

What it does is put us in the stress period a lot longer," said Walaker, who had earlier expected the river to subside this week.

Fargo has remained mostly dry, but areas south and southwest of the city are still flood-

Water levels on some sections of the Red River might rise even more in the next few days. The Army Corps of Engineers in Minneapolis said Monday that it had to start releasing more water from a brimming reservoir upstream along the Minnesota-South Dakota

That will translate to about a 6-inch rise in the Red River's level at Wahpeton, N.D.-Breckenridge, Minn., an area about 45 miles south of Fargo that already has been devastated by the ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. - In the first trial to come out of the Aberdeen sex scandal, two Army trainees testified Monday that their drill sergeant raped them in his office.

Two Army trainees accuse drill sergeant of rape

A 21-year-old private said she was returning to her barracks from the bathroom when Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson ordered her into his office, pushed her onto a couch, pulled off her shorts and raped her.

"I begged him to stop," the private said. "He was laying on top of me. There wasn't a whole lot I could do."

The second witness, a 22-year-old specialist with the National Guard, said Simpson pushed her onto a bed in his office and raped her when she went to confront him about his criticism about her uniform and nail polish.

"He was laying on top of me. I couldn't go anywhere," the woman said. "I didn't know what he was going to do because he was so mean."

Simpson is accused of raping six women in the most serious case to emerge from the Army's investigation into sexual misconduct at the weapons-testing center 30 miles northeast of Baltimore.

It is also the most racially and politically charged case.

All 12 of the Aberdeen soldiers charged so far are black, while most of the alleged victims are white. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has accused the Army of targeting black drill sergeants, while five white female recruits have said investigators unsuccessfully pressured them to accuse their black superiors of rape.

Army officials have denied race was factor in their investigation.

The two trainees who accused Simpson of rape on Monday are white. A third woman who testified that he alleged attacks occurred in 1995.

Simpson, who is married, has already pleaded guilty to having consensual sex with 11 trainees in violation of an Army rule prohibiting personal relationships between supervisors and subordinates.

But he said he is innocent of rape, as well as other charges of forcibly sodomizing, punching, grabbing or threatening

The offenses he has admitted carry a maximum of 32 years in prison.

One earlier Aberdeen court-martial was settled without a trial. Capt. Derrick Robertson pleaded guilty last week to adultery, consensual sodomy and other charges. He will be discharged after serving four months in prison.

Under questioning from Simpson's attorney, Frank J. Spinner, the two Army trainees acknowledged they didn't report the alleged attacks. They also admitted they had no bruises and were forcibly kissed her is black. All three not choked, punched or threatened by Simpson.

A third woman, a 22-year-old specialist, testified Monday that Simpson called her to his office to tell her she was an attractive young lady and forcibly kissed her in her barracks a month later.

"Basically, I was in shock. I wasn't offended," the woman said.

Army Secretary Togo West said last month he will ask the Army inspector general to review the outcome of the criminal cases at Aberdeen.

The scandal has also prompted a call for a worldwide review of the Army's policy on sexual harassment.

Defense attorneys have argued that high-ranking Army officials, including West, prejudiced Simpson's case by declaring their zero tolerance for sexual misconduct when the scandal broke in November. The lawyers said those comments led Army brass to bring unreasonably serious charges against Simpson.

flooding caused by melting snow. Breckenridge evacuated more residents Monday as crews repaired leaks in some of the dikes "We're in a critical situation now," said Jack Thompson, Wilkin County emergency manager. At Casey's tavern in Breckenridge, bartender Ed Dell helped clean up the mess and pull up flooring that was damaged by last week's high water.

"It's not very good," Dell said dejectedly over the sound of hammers. "She's coming back up."

Dell, who has worked for the riverfront bar for 28 years, said this is the worst flooding he has ever seen in the rural community. "It's making for an awful lot of sad people," he said.

The Coast Guard used a helicopter and borrowed an air boat Monday to check on rural residents in the Fargo area. People wanting to be picked up were told to place bright flags or sheets outside as a signal.

Near Hickson, south of Fargo, officials found only a few homes still occupied in one housing development where the water was up to 10 feet deep.

Crews used the air boat to deliver a new sump pump to Jackie Crawford's Victorian home, which is surrounded by a 4-foot dike of sandbags and plywood.

"It's been hell," said a frazzled Crawford. "We've got to get the new pump in or we're going to lose the base-of all calls to the Crisis Center.

"It's a simple procedure over the phone," she said. "The first order of business is safety. Everything else follows after that. If you're in danger, call the police first. They have an enormous amount of intervention in domestic violence situations

Davis said the intervention they do at the Crisis Center are not the typical 911 phone calls, but they are still emotionally charged and difficult.

'Some victims are stoic, and some are very emotional," she said. "It doesn't matter. It's all the same problem.

Evidence obtained from Unabom suspect's cabin deemed crucial to prosecution's case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. - Prosecutors filed court documents Monday defending the search of Unaborn suspect Theodore Kaczynski's Montana cabin and asked the judge to quickly reject a defense motion seeking to suppress evidence seized in the search.

Defense allegations that the warrant for the search was obtained under false pretenses were utterly without merit, prosecutors said in filing a stack of documents to support

Evidence seized in the raid on Kaczynski's remote cabin is expected to be at the heart of the prosecution's case. Prosecutors have said the evidence includes the original manuscript of the Unabomber "manifesto," and a journal in which Kaczynski allegedly claims responsibility for each of the bombings.

The affidavit filed with the request for a search warrant amply established probable cause to issue the warrant, prosecutors wrote in the papers filed Monday.

In their motion to suppress, court-appointed defense lawyers Quin Denvir and Judy Clarke relied heavily on statements from David Kaczynski - the suspect's brother and their mother, Wanda The Kaczynskis both said some of their statements had been mischaracterized in the FBI affidavit.

But prosecutors said Monday that the defense failed to demonstrate any problems that would have affected the request for a warrant.

They asked the judge to reject the defense motion

"Significantly, (the defense) does not dispute the accuracy of any of the information that David provided, only the affidavit's recitation of the opinions that David offered to the FBI," the government said.

Instead, prosecutors said, defense lawyers "focus on trivial, semantic distinctions that fall far short of showing an intentional or reckless material misstatement."

Prosecutors also countered defense allegations that some DNA evidence appeared to exclude Kaczynski, and defended their analysis of Kaczynski's writings, which they link to the Unabomber's 30,000-word, anti-technology manifesto.

Unless U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell Jr. grants the prosecution's request for dismissal of the defense motion, a hearing will be held May 16.

Motions to suppress are routine in criminal cases, as defense attorneys try to exclude as much of the prosecution's evidence as possible.

Former Sen. Nancy Kassebaum Baker's decision to join the board of directors of the Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development will bring her to K-State about three times a year.

The institute, which aims to help rural people improve their lives, has its policies and priorities set by a board of directors that meets three times a year in Manhattan and once a year elsewhere in Kansas.

It is located in Call Hall and administered through the Department of Agriculture.

A seat on the board opened up when Joe Berkely, Dodge City resident, decided not to serve an additional term. Berkely suggested asking

"It was talked about at one meeting and Ron (Wilson, director of the institute) wrote the letter on behalf of the board," K-State President Jon Wefald, board member, said. "We were delighted and a bit surprised that she agreed to join us.'

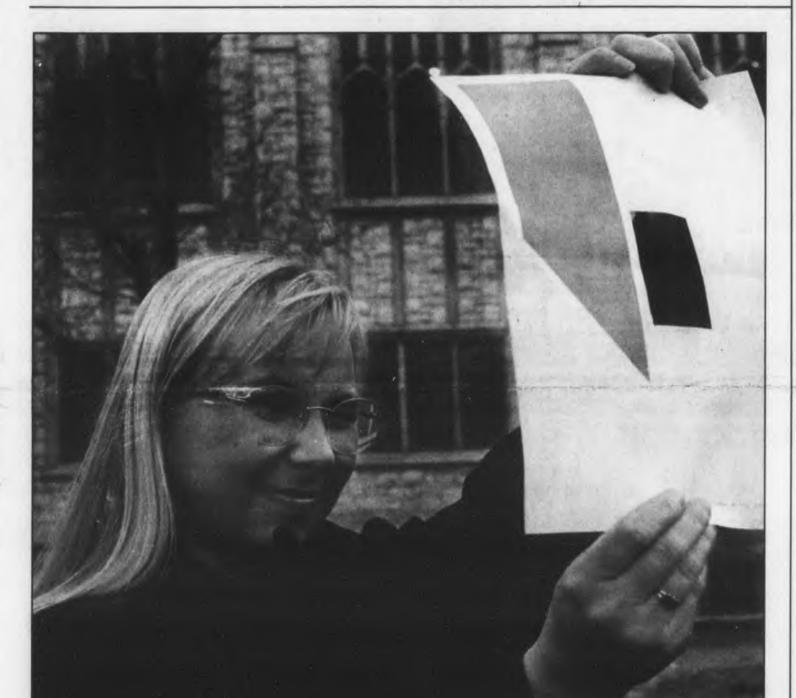

Wefald said Kassebaum Baker had received many offers from boards and organizations, and he said he was glad she had chosen to be a part of something connected with K-State.

Wilson said he was also thrilled with the addition to the board.

"She's been an outstanding leader for Kansas a very thoughtful individual who has represented Kansas very well on the national level," he said. "I know she has a love of rural Kansas."

Since her resignation from her three-term career in the Senate, Kassebaum Baker has divided her time between her ranch near Burdick and Washington, D.C.

She will serve a two-year term on the board of the institute, helping decide the direction the organization takes with programs such as north-south trade corridors and rural county leadership devel-

Breaking barriers

Fifty years ago, when Jackie Robinson broke the color barrier in professional baseball, black athletes were still excluded from intercollegiate sports.

Eldrick "Tiger" Woods, broke the color barrier in golf on Sunday, and his father, Earl, helped integrate K-State sports.

Earl Woods attended K-State in 1952 and 1953 and was one of the first black athletes to integrate the then-Big Conference. Woods played baseball on the K-State team as an outfielder and also in the infield at a time where there were very few black athletes in the conference.

"We had to support each other because it was lonely out there," Veryl Switzer, long-time friend of Woods, said. "Our role then was to integrate into intercollegiate athletics. We felt as if it was important for us to carry the torch for others who would be in athletics on down the road.

Woods played on the K-State baseball team in '52 and '53 and was the only person of his race on the team those two years. When Woods traveled out of town for games, he was forced to stay in black hotels separate from his nity team named Cleburne that played at the north end of Tuttle Creek Reservoir. Woods received a starting berth at first base when he was a sophomore on the team and was the leading fielder with 108 outs in 120 chances.

"Manhattan was just a small community back then, and we had heard that he was a good player

EARL WOODS, Jim Jacobs, Joe Arnold and Richard Tannahill anchored the 1953 K-State team who went 5-15 that year in the Big 7 Conference.

"Some of the community people didn't like it very much," he said. "Earl was an excellent player, and I didn't think anything of it."

Discoveries to present diabetics with options

what to do

TAMARA PETERSON

Diabetics have had relief from their disease for 75 years, but new medications are giving them more options.

A 22-year-old medical student discovered insulin in 1922, but nobody made advances beyond that for more than 30 years.

People with diabetes can be classified as Type I or II. People with Type I are born with it, while Type II usually occurs late in life.

Type I occurs when the pancreas does not produce insulin. Type II diabetics produce insulin, but cells do not work

Dr. Scott Coonrod, of Mercy Center, Health Sulfonylureas was made available to patients in 1955. But he said this medication has some drawbacks.

Coonrod said 15 percent of diabetics do not respond to Sulfonylureas. He also said it can lower blood sugar too much and cause people to gain seven to 10 pounds.

Within the past two years, Food and Drug Administration made four new diabetes medications available for purchase.

Glucophage was approved by the FDA in 1995. Precose and Humalog were approved a year later and Rezulin was approved in January. All are available at Lafene Health Center.

Glucophage might be new to the United States, but Europeans have used the medication for 15 years. Glucophage, a pill taken with meals, decreases glucose production by the liver and increases cellular uptake of glucose. The patient can still produce insulin without gaining Jennifer Bradford, Lafene employee, said a disadvantage of Glucophage is gastrointestinal upset. Patients could also have diarrhea, bloating and kidney trouble.

"If your sugar isn't under control, you should look for another kind of medication," Bradford said.

Like Glucophage, Precose can cause gastrointestinal upset, diarrhea and gas.

Precose, taken with meals, decreases intestinal absorption of carbohydrates by lowering the amount of sugar absorbed after meals.

'Precose isn't as effective, but you can use it along with other medication," Coonrod said. Unlike the other medications, Humalog is injected into the bloodstream. Bradford said the amount and number of daily injections differs for each person.

"Not everyone would require three injections a day. Some may need it more or less," she said. "It depends on the person to control their sugar level."

Coonrod said people on Humalog can take their medication at any time, and the transition from insulin treatment is simple.

"Humalog is fast-reacting because instead of taking the

JOHN HENDERSON

K-State President Jon Wefald has made a written decision as to whether Ali Kanso El-Ghori, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, will receive tenure. However, according to Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the president, that decision is confidential.

Reagan said copies of the decision have been sent to El-Ghori, Faculty Senate president David Balk, Provost James Coffman, and Ruth Dyer, chair of the faculty grievance committee with which El-Ghori filed a grievance last November.

El-Ghori has retained legal counsel and requested not to be interviewed until after he consults his attorney.

Carol Oukrop, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said she didn't think El-Ghori has the option of requesting tenure again if Wefald decides not to grant it.

"Normally instructors aren't rehired if they don't receive tenure," she said.

After a split vote in late 1995 among the mass communications faculty, Oukrop sent the results to the College of Arts and Sciences, along with her recommen-

Five of the college advisory committee members voted not to approve El-Ghori's tenure and one abstained. Based on this, Coffman and Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, decided not to recommend that Wefald grant tenure.

► NATION AND WORLD ALMOST 300 WOMEN EXPERIENCE HARASSMENT AT CAR PLANT.

NORMAL, III. - Almost 300 women were victims of sexual harassment or witnessed it at this city's Mitsubishi Motor Manufacturing of America plant, the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission says.

The EEOC provided the automaker on Monday with a list of 289 women's names as part of the agency's sexual harassment lawsuit against the Japanese automaker. This marked the first time the EEOC has said how many people it believes were affected by the alleged

The agency did not say how many of the women were harassed and how many were witnesses. But it considers all to be potential victims because the agency's definition of sexual harassment includes being forced to work in an environment where offensive activity is widespread and tolerated by management.

The company and the EEOC have agreed to keep the names confidential. Mitsubishi spokeswoman Gael O'Brien said the company wanted to know the names so it could investigate. The EEOC sued Mitsubishi in April 1996, alleging widespread sexual harassment. It believes additional women have been victims but are too afraid to contact the federal agency.

When the lawsuit was filed, the company employed about 800 women in its work force of 4,000.

In response to the suit, Mitsubishi at first denied wrongdoing, shut the plant for a day and bused more than 2,000 workers to Chicago, 120 miles away, to demonstrate outside the EEOC office

CRITICISM OF FBI PROCEDURES MAKES PROBLEMS IN OKC CASE.

DENVER - A federal report criticizing the FBI's handling of evidence in the Oklahoma City bombing case created additional problems for prosecutors Questioning of prospective jurors resumed.

The report by the Justice Department's inspector general conclud-ed FBI agents produced inaccurate and flawed testimony in the bombing case.

Investigators concluded that FBI explosives unit examiner David Williams repeatedly reached conclusions that incriminated the defendants without a scientific basis and that were not explained. The report recommended that Williams be reassigned.

The report also concluded the chief of the unit, J. Thomas Thurman, did not properly review Williams' conclusions but still approved his report.

Federal prosecutors in the bombing case declined to comment on the report, citing a judge's gag order.

They already have removed Williams from their list of witnesses and have said they will use another FBI expert and a British scientist to present the explosives evidence.

Defense attorney Stephen Jones, who represents Timothy McVeigh, was in court and could not be reached for comment immediately. Previously, Jones had indicated he would attack the lab's work on cross-examination.

• ARMY SERGEANTS COMPETE TO HAVE SEX WITH MOST WOMEN, ACCORDING TO TESTIMONY.

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. - An Army drill sergeant accused of rape was in competition with another sergeant to see who could have sex with the most women, according to court-martial testimony

Sgt. Delmar Simpson's trial is the first stemming from the Army's investigation into the sex scandal at the Aberdeen weapons-testing center 30 miles northeast of Baltimore. Two female trainees testified Monday that Simpson raped them in his office in 1995.

A 21-year-old private said she did not report the alleged rape because she didn't want anyone to know. She said she had heard Simpson and Sgt. 1st Class Tony Cross, 33, had a competition to see who could have sex with the most Today's Day of Action might be the first contact many students have with the Progressive Coalition.

"As an umbrella organization, we are trying to coordinate our member organizations to help them achieve their goals," said Grant Denny, junior in political science and speech communication and coalition president.

Student involvement and education about issues is a main purpose and concern of the coalition.

"We are battling against student apathy," Denny said. "For many students, politics is not something they want to organizations, Denny said. But the members agree on common principles like increased funding for education, universal health care and campaign finance reform.

'Generally, we are taking a student activist stance, and we support the liberal/progressive cause," he said.

The group e-mails about 25 people about member organization meetings

The list grew from eight or nine people earlier this year, and Denny said he would like to see it increase more.

A project slated for next year is to post fliers around campus monthly announcing meeting times of member organizations, Denny said.

Denny said they are also looking into sponsoring a large event next fall. It would be a concert of local bands intermixed with local and state-wide speakers and a national speaker.

The letters will be sent to government leadership in those countries, their embassies in the United States and the Secretary of State's office in Washington, D.C., he said.

The Day of Action will also be the last Progressive Coalition signature drive for the new priorities petition, Denny said.

Copies of the petition are circulating college campuses across the country. The petition states that students are distressed by cuts in social programs to balance the budget.

It suggests that appropriate cuts be made in military spending and corporate welfare, and it supports an increased emphasis on funding for education, social programs and environmental protection.

Denny said they are trying to get at least 500 signatures.

O ANTI-ATHEISM ARGUMENT FULL OF HOLES Editor.

Finally my hours and hours, day after day, of praying have paid off. Kevin Bailey, intellectual powerhouse that he is, has provided proof of the existence of God that is so strong that to question it would be "intellectually dishonest at best, willfully ignorant at worst."

It goes something like this. Because nobody can prove the nonexistence of God, then God must exist.

For me, the most impressive feature of this breakthrough in logical proof is its applicability to some of my own beliefs. For example, because nobody can disprove the existence of the Tooth Fairy, then it would be "intellectually dishonest at best, willfully ignorant at worst" to consider the nonexistence of the Tooth Fairy as a possibility.

If we use the same line of reasoning as displayed in Bailey's column, we can attain an even more impressive means of justifying his conclusions.

Bailey has been seen in, and therefore proven to be in, Manhattan. Whoever saw him couldn't simultaneously be elsewhere to prove that he wasn't there. Thus, Bailey was, and is, everywhere.

So we can conclude that Bailey is omnipotent, at least by his definition, which is "in all places at one time."

I'm not writing this letter with hopes of pissing off the religious community or to try to persuade anyone to change their

Anniversary of rape still haunts victim

SMITH MARY RENEE SMITH is a junio in theatre. You can e-mail your comments to Mary at (mojo@ksu.edu).

I have never been known to be the kind of person to keep my mouth shut. My ability to voice my opinions and, at times, be offensive has gotten me in trouble on more than one occasion. But I have held my tongue about a dirty secret for too long.

Tuesday, April 15, was an anniversary of sorts for me. Five years ago, I was raped at a party right across from the campus here at K-State.

I was in town to take care of some business at Fort Riley and to tour the campus. My husband at the time had been sent to Germany, and I had to decide whether to join him or stay in Kansas and finish college. I ran into a young woman I had known in high school, and she invited me to a party.

"It's real easy to get to," she said, "just across from campus." I had told her how beautiful the campus looked earlier that day as I wandered around looking for Anderson Hall. She lived just a few houses down from where the party was supposed to be.

I took care of my business during the day and after dinner decided to at least make an appearance at the party because she had been so nice to invite me. I found the house right away just across from campus, like she said. It was a warm spring night, and lots of people were on the lawn drinking and having a great time.

I had a drink. I had another drink. I met some cool people, including a guy who had just broken up with his fiancée. We talked for a while. I told him I was married and all about my go-to-Germany-or-go-to-school dilemma.

He was nice. Cute and polite, with a kid-next-door kind of look. He asked if I wanted another drink. I said I didn't think so because I was driving. He offered to make me something special. He had a poster with the recipe for any drink I could ever think of hanging on the back of his bedroom door. I said I would go look at it with him.

For those of you who are afraid of the truth or who are weak of heart or stomach, I beg you not to read on.

About now, you have either stopped reading because you are tired of being lectured about date rape, or you can figure out what happens next. It is a lot like watching a horror movie and hearing the scary music. You want to scream at the girl on the screen, "Run, run! Don't you know what he is going to do?"

I'm not dumb. I heard the scary music. I was a bit drunk and ignored it. I figured there was a house full of people, and besides, I could take care of myself.

If you haven't learned by now, learn from someone who knows: RAPE IS NOT SEX. I've had sex. I like sex. Sex is good. Rape is violent.

I was forced out of my shorts. My face was shoved into a pillow. I fought. I tried to get away. When I turned my head and screamed, he put his hand over my mouth and I bit him. I bit him hard enough to draw blood, and then he

It was weird after that. He pulled his pants up, and I pulled up mine. He asked if I would like anything else to drink, I said no. I asked him where my shoes were. He nicely handed them to me and commented on how cute my little feet were. He left the room.

I left the room and headed for my car. A friend of his asked why I was leaving so suddenly and if I was OK to drive home. I plainly said, "Your friend just raped me up the ass," and left.

I bled for days. I had bruises on my thighs in the shape of his hands where he had grabbed me. I had bruises on my shoulders where he had pinned me down. I told no one. I took a lot of cold showers and slept with the lights on and the doors locked. Sometimes I still do.

It has been five years. I thought I would be over it by now, and I am, to some extent. I have been tested and retested for every disease under the sun. I don't think about it as much anymore.

I still avoid driving down that particular street, even though I know the rapist is long gone. I still have nightmares and think about all the things I could have done dif-

The hardest thing to live with now is the guilt. The guilt for keeping my mouth shut. I should have told someone. I should have told the young woman I knew who lived so close. Was she a later victim? Does she sleep with the lights on and have nightmares because I didn't say anything? What about all the other women who might have come in contact with him? To those women, wherever you may be, I am truly sorry. I hope you did not meet the same fate I did. And if, the gods forbid, you did, I hope you had the courage to speak up. I'm

Possible closing speaks of larger issue

Recent plans to close Laramie Street in favor of pedestrians and the Manhattan Christian College asks the question: What is urban?

As Kansans, we live daily with contradictions in urban planning. Where is the line that divides rural towns and urban cities in Kansas? Does the fact there are no farms in central Manhattan classify the city as urban? This dichotomy is further subclassified into urban and suburban, which more closely relates to the issue at hand. That K-State and Manhattan Christian College sit side-by-side in the middle of Manhattan presents a wonderful opportunity for study. The two campuses could not be more different. K-State has been developed, rather randomly, in the fashion of most large rural-turned-urban universities. It has a definite edge with distinct campus streets. It's as if, upon entering K-State, you've stepped into a micro-MCC, however, has much less history from which to draw. It's a campus that has had to contextualize itself within the confines of an existing city, whereas K-State defines the existing city. MCC's situation introduces several problems when it comes to urban planning.

The Laramie Street closing debacle wouldn't be nearly as important if it weren't for countless past planning mistakes that have effectively turned Manhattan into one of the worst small cities for driving in Kansas. Excluding the four-lane highways to nowhere in north Manhattan, this city has relatively few ways of passage. Anderson/Bluemont avenues or Fort Riley/Tuttle Creek boulevards act as the main thoroughfares. Poyntz Avenue was effectively neutered with the "plopping" of the Manhattan

Town Center at its main terminus. Claflin Avenue dead ends in a residential neighborhood. Thanks to wacky private housing development, with curving streets and cul-de-sacs, driving through backwoods parts of town is almost impossible. In some areas, giant concrete traffic circles placed in the middle of intersections do more to upset drivers than slow traffic. Does the city commission think pissing motorists off is the solution?

Traffic in Manhattan has been forced onto the few main streets that do exist. In other words, east-west traveling is difficult already, but would closing Laramie make it more said Friday in the Collegian, the usufructuary MCC must also respect the identity and efficiency of the town.

Although quiet streets are a suburban ideal, in the context of Laramie and its proximity to Aggieville and K-State, we're not wrestling with ideals.

This is a street that, because of the lack of other streets entering Aggieville, is used by more than those who live in the neighborhood. When one wants to avoid the unforgivable insanity that is the 17th Street/Anderson Avenue intersection, Laramie offers an easy drive to Aggieville. This does not, however, forgive those drivers who insist on speeding.

With a large K-State population living south of campus, Laramie is also a busy street for pedestrians. And although closing Laramie could create a pedestrian mall (for MCC or for everyone?), one questions whether the installation of (rmf@ksu.edu). stoplight crosswalks would not improve matters as much. As for the "identity" of MCC, the school must come to realize it is an urban campus

unlike K-State - and must fit into this larger city context. It is shortsighted to consider the MCC campus in a conventional light. Look at a school like George Washington University in Washington, D.C. The school consists of a collection of buildings on city streets, but GW has installed distinctive lights and signage that make the pedestrian and driver aware that they have entered a university

No city streets have been closed to make the campus more "campusier." Why? Washington can't afford to close streets that are necessary for good traffic flow. MCC should consider a project to identify itself and its urban campus through signs and landmarks. This should be included in MCC's Planned Unit Development strategy, which will be discussed in a May 5 public meeting at the Manhattan Fire Department. Although green space is desirable in a campus setting, it is not necessary, especially when considering the close proximity of MCC to City Park. This argument over a street closing has strayed from a relevant course. As long as Laramie Street residents and the MCC continue to consider themselves in a suburban context, the debate will continue to veer away from larger urban issues.

Alumni vice president moves to WSU

TRISHA LANGFORD staff reporter

Brad Beets, former vice president of the KSU Alumni Association, recently had a blood transfusion. It didn't have anything to do with hospitals, but schools instead.

"I had a transfusion from purple blood to gold and black. It's still a bit of mixture," Beets said.

Beets resigned from K-State in late March to accept the position of executive director at Wichita State University.

A native of Wichita, Beets graduated from WSU in 1987 with a bachelor's degree in business administration. As a student, he worked in the Alumni Associations records department, where he continued to work after graduation.

After more than a year, he was promoted to assistant director of the the Alumni Association at WSU.

Beets came to K-State in 1991 as the director of alumni clubs. In 1995, he was appointed as vice president. In this position, Beets was in charge of alumni memberships, marketing and the educational license program.

"Brad was responsible for starting the license plate program. It is expected to generate more than $250,000 in scholarships during the next five years," Karen Shafer, writer at the KSU Foundation, said.

Beets will be at a school that does not have a license plate program. He will try to establish one at WSU, making it the second institution to have one.

He can also be accredited for an increase in alumni members.

Membership increased by almost 2,000 members during his time as vice president, according to Shafer.

At the time of the opening at WSU, Beets was not looking for a change in jobs.

"It was an opportunity that came up, and I couldn't turn it down," Beets said.
"Any time you have a chance to move up and on, you want to take the opportunity."

Beets said he had mixed emotions about leaving.

"I am sad to leave, yet happy about the challenges that lie ahead," Beets said.

Interviews to replace Beets began April 9. Four candidates were interviewed for the position. One candidate was asked to return for a second interview.

Mayor-elect Bruce Snead along with new city commissioners Ed Klimek, Karen McCulloh and Roger Reitz were welcomed into office by a crowd of 50 people at Tuesday night's City Commission meeting.

Snead, former commissioner and mayor pro-tem was unanimously chosen by the commission as mayor. Steve Hall, who has served on the commission for two years, was chosen as mayor pro-tem.

The three new commissioners, who are replacing Justin Kastner, Edith Stunkel and former mayor Sydney Carlin, took their seats for the first time Tuesday. Klimek, McCulloh and Reitz were all elected on April 1.

The meeting also served as a farewell to the outgoing commissioners. Former mayor Carlin fought back tears as she expressed her feelings about her stay as mayor.

"It's been a wonderful growing experience that has truly absorbed me," Carlin said. "I look forward to the new leader-ship that begins tonight."

Each of the outgoing commissioners also took time to bid the commission farewell. Kastner, two-year commissioner and senior in food science and industry, left the new commissioners with a few parting words.

"I don't want you to mess up Manhattan while I'm in graduate school," he said.

His comments were followed by laughter and applause.

MASTERS TV RATINGS SHATTER ALL-TIME RATINGS FOR ANY MAJOR

CBS said Tuesday more than 50 million people watched Tiger Woods' historic Masters victory over the weekend, making it the most watched golf tournament ever. Sunday's final round received a 14.1 Nielsen national rating and 31 share, shattering all ratings records for Grand Slam golf tournaments. The highest previous rating for a major tournament was 12.0 for the final round of the 1966 Masters.

K-State women lengthen losing streak to nine

SHANE MCCORMICK

It was a new place to play, but it resulted in the same thing for the K-State women's tennis team Tuesday afternoon. Playing for the first time this season at the L.P. Washburn Tennis Complex, the Cats lost for the ninth-straight time against Nebraska, 6-1.

This year's dual was a complete turnaround from last year's match. Last season, the Cats were the team that came up with The Cornhuskers dominated the singles portion of the dual, taking five of the six matches. For Nebraska coach Scott Jacobson, this year's results were

"I really thought the score of this dual would be around 5-4," Jacobson said. "I think it was a combination of things today. One, our team played pretty solid today, and I think we caught K-State on a down time. I was really stunned to see us up 5-1 after the singles matches."

Cat coach Steve Bietau said Nebraska had a good chance of winning after the way his team played at the beginning.

'We got down early in those singles matches," Bietau said. "If you would have said we were going to lose at that point, it would have made sense. But we fought back and had some tough battles in those matches." Those tough battles Bietau spoke of came at the two, four, five and six singles spots. All of those matches were tight, three-set matches. Junior Chris Schulte picked up the only win of the day for the Cats at the No. 5 singles spot.

After dropping the first set 2-6, Schulte stormed back and took the next two sets, 6-1, 6-3 over Adriana Dulic.

With the victory, Schulte recorded her team-high ninth win

"Right now, my singles play is a lot better than it was earlier on," Schulte said. "The key has been that I have been able to figure out things on the court, a lot of it has been mental. senior Nikki Lagerstrom. Today, I made adjustments after the first set.'

Practicing before her match, junior Yana Dorodnova suffered a slight injury, rolling her ankle. Dorodnova went on to play the match and lost to Sandra Noetzel 6-3, 6-1

"Yana's first problem today was that she rolled her ankle," Bietau said. The second problem she had today was dealing with that injury. She didn't handle it well today. She got frustrated that it happened to her again.'

Jacobson said Noetzel was able to take advantage of Dorodnova's injury

"She was really able to move Yana around the court and with her ankle that was a hindrance for Yana," Jacobson said. 'Noetzel did a great job of moving the ball around and playing her type of game today."

At the No. 2 position, junior Lena Piliptchak fell in three sets to Lisa Hart 6-2, 4-6, 6-4.

Also losing in three sets was junior Dinah Watson and Playing at the No. 4 position, Watson fell to Jennifer Thoste in a baseline battle, 5-7, 6-2, 6-3. Last season, Thoste played at the No. 1 position for the Cornhuskers against the Cats.

At No. I doubles, Dorodnova and Piliptchak fell to Noetzel At No. 2, Schulte and Karen Nicholson fell behind early in their doubles match but fought back with a late run. Down 7-3, the Cat duo was able to pull within 7-6. But Hart and Gina Pelazini closed out the match, 8-6.

'We need to start playing in the beginning of matches like we do in the end," Schulte said. "We need to be more aggressive in the beginning. We started getting aggressive when we were down. If we could have done that, I think the results would have been different."

Yang and Dulic rounded up the Cornhuskers sweep at doubles with a 8-4 win over Watson and Lagerstrom

K-State will be back in action this weekend against Texas.

Patterson adds center, point guard to fall roster

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

K-State head coach Deb Patterson announced Tuesday Demetra DeShay of Bastrop, Texas, and Marshela Webb of Kansas City, Mo., have signed national letters of intent to play basketball for the Wildcats next year.

DeShay, who goes by Dee, was a first team all-Academic team member and earned all-region accolades her sophomore, junior and senior years at Bastrop High School. A 5'7" point guard, DeShay averaged 10.8 points per game, six assists, 5.9 rebounds and 5.2 steals per game last season.

"Dee is an athletic point guard with the ability to shoot the three, penetrate and make great passing decisions," Patterson said. "We're looking for her to assume the role in the program and expect her to be one of the great point guards in the Big 12 by the time she graduates.' DeShay also earned all-district honors all four years. As a senior, DeShay was three of the teams' tournaments. "As good a player as she is, Demetra's even a better person," Mike Stobaugh, DeShay's high school head coach, said. "She sets a high standard to live by, and we all admire her. She's also a tremendous competitor.'

named the team's most valuable player and earned all-tournament honors at all

Webb earned all-district 3A and honorable mention all-metro accolades her junior and senior years at Notre Dame de Sion. Webb scored 1,401 career points and set school records for rebounds, steals and free throws

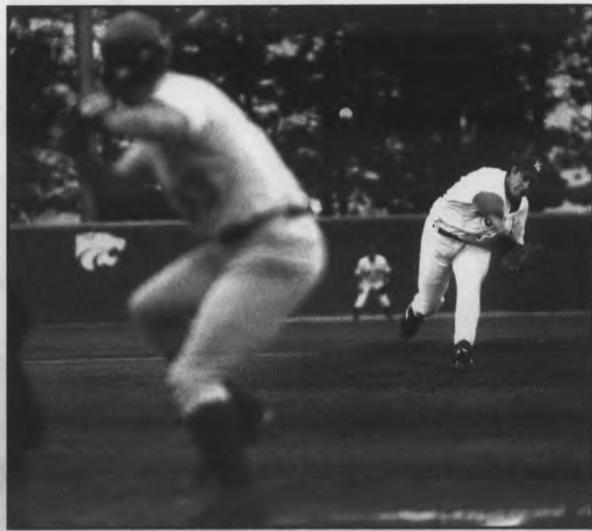

The 5'10" center ended her high-school career as Notre Dame's second leading scorer and rebounder. As a senior on this year's 15-13 team, Webb averaged 22 points, 15 rebounds and 2.5 blocks per game

"K-State is the lucky one here," Rick Rhodes, Webb's high school coach, said. "Not only are they getting a quality player but also a quality person as well. I think that put K-State over the edge when they saw what a great person she is.' Webb also played on the greater Kansas City Coaches Association and Mo-Kan all-Star Teams.

"Marshela is an explosive and quick player who has played a majority of her career with her back to the basket," Patterson said. "We want to pull her out, face her up and play her at the three position."

The spring signing period ends Aug. 15, and K-State has three remaining scholarships to fill for 1997-98. DeShay and Webb join high-school players Kim Woodlee, Brandy Harris, Morgan Finneran and first-team community college all-American Ewa Laskowska on next year's Wildcat squad.

Support group established to help people with nervous disorder

Carolyn Hall-Tuiel used to play Nintendo with her daughter, but in 1991 she started seeing two or three Marios instead of one

Her friends noticed that her right eye would float and droop every now and

Hall-Tuiel, graduate student in sociology, decided to visit the the eye doctor, but the doctor was unsuccessful in finding a name for the illness.

She mentioned the symptoms to her regular physician, who spent two years looking for a cause. Finally, the doctor tested Hall-Tuiel for myasthenia gravis.

The test confirmed MG, and Hall-Tuiel was left with questions about the nature of her disease.

"Myasthenia gravis is really a problem of our nerves telling our muscles what to do. A lack of communication between the two," said Dr. Larry Moeller, a staff physician at Lafene "MG is uncommon but not rare. One or two people in 20,000 have MG,"

Hall-Tuiel sees Moeller for treatment. He also treats Nancy Applegate, graduate student in history. She was diagnosed with MG in 1982 after she too had double vision.

Hall-Tuiel met Applegate through a mutual friend and was shocked to learn that someone else in Manhattan shared her difficulties.

Hall-Tuiel decided to form a support group for MG patients. The director of the Myasthenia Gravis Foundation in Kansas City helped Hall-Tuiel organize and put together the first meeting on March 28 1997.

"Twelve to 14 other MG patients around Manhattan showed up. We discussed our diagnoses, our symptoms and the medication. It made everyone feel like less of a freak. We could sympathize with others," Hall-Tuiel said.

The group has not met since March but plans to have another meeting soon. Since the meeting, Applegate and Hall-Tuiel have remained in touch, sharing their lifestyle changes with one

For Applegate, the disease caused a career change

"I used to own a bookstore in Santa Fe, New Mexico. I got to the point were I couldn't lift boxes of books, or reach high to reshelve them. My eyes were not letting me read titles on the books, and I was unable to jump up and help customers," Applegate said.

That's when she decided to move to Manhattan and attend K-State for the history program.

Everyday life now, includes backpacks, elevators, naps and handicapped

"I wake up every morning with a very finite amount of energy," Applegate

Applegate and Hall-Tuiel, like most

MG patients, can only handle brief periods of physical activity before they need to rest.

For Hall-Tuiel, MG has changed her exercise routine. Once an avid runner, Hall-Tuiel can no longer run because of the severe muscle fatigue. She has certain restrictions with driving long distances because her eyes become heavy.

Even routine activities such as walking across campus and climbing stairs wear an MG patient out.

There is no cure for this chronic dis-

The common-sense treatments include plenty of rest, a well-balanced diet with foods high in potassium and avoiding exposure to infections and all forms of stress.

Low levels of activity are important for MG patients. This can include resting the eyes by closing them for a few minutes each hour or lying down briefly several times during the day.

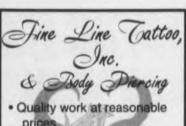

There are medications that can be taken to counteract bothersome symp-

Hall-Tuiel said that the problem with the medicine she takes is that it is only manufactured by one company, so each month the company hikes their prices.

There are unpleasant side effects to the medicine, too," Applegate said. These side effects include stomach cramps, increased perspiration, salivation, muscle twitching and muscle cramps "Attitude is everything in dealing with MG," Applegate said.

Fire leaves 181 Muslims dead

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINA, Saudi Arabia - Fires driven by high winds tore through a sprawling, overcrowded tent city Tuesday, trapping and killing pilgrims gathered for an Islamic ritual. The official death toll was 181, but witnesses said at least 300 died.

Saudi Arabia said more than 800 pilgrims were injured in the fire, which witnesses blamed on exploding canisters of cooking gas.

Most of the dead were Indians, Pakistanis and Bangladeshis, many of them elderly, witnesses told the Associated Press. Some were trampled to death as pilgrims fled the fire on the plain outside the holy city of Mecca.

"Men panicked and ran in every direction," said an Indian pilgrim who spoke to the Associated Press by telephone and identified himself only as Irfan. Helicopters dropped water from above while civil defense workers used firetrucks' hoses on the flames

Hundreds of thousands of pilgrims were stranded after the fire destroyed an estimated 70,000 tents, which the pilgrims use for shelter in the final days of the Hajj. Civil defense forces from Mecca and nearby Jiddah and Taif rushed to the scene, handing out tents and supplies.

The fire erupted shortly before noon as Muslims gathered for the Hajj, or pilgrimage, were beginning to move to Mount Arafat, where the Prophet Mohammed delivered his final sermon in the seventh century.

There, 2 million Muslims will stand together in prayer today in the climax of the pilgrimage to the Muslim holy sites: The Hajj has been the scene of several recent tragedies, including the deaths of 1,426 people in a 1990 stampede. Less than an hour before the fire began Tuesday, security forces had thrown up a cordon around the entire plain, closing it to new arrivals to stop further overcrowding, witnesses said. The fire was started by exploding gas cylinders, which pilgrims use for cooking in the tents, they said. Fanned by winds of nearly 40 mph, it swept across the plain and quickly spread chaos through the camp, crammed with row after row of white

"There was chaos everywhere. ... Panic spread through the camps as fast as the fire," said a newspaper reporter at the encampment who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The injured were carried away on stretchers and in people's arms, while others wearing white robes for the pilgrimage fled along smoke-filled alleys between the tents.

Witnesses said they had seen hundreds of bodies. Saudi newspaper reporters who visited the site said at least 300 had died, most of them trampled underfoot in the pandemonium.

Three hundred fire engines helped battle the blaze, and helicopters dropped water on the blaze, witnesses said.

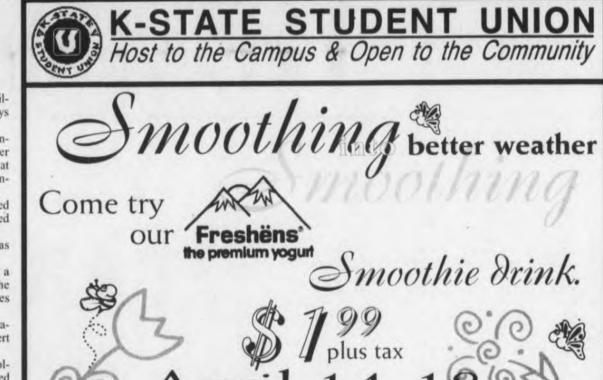

After about three hours, it was brought under control.

Hours after the fire was put out, a cloud of smoke still hung over the encampment, and was visible miles

By Tuesday afternoon, as temperatures soared to 104 degrees, the desert plain was a scene of devastation.

Pilgrims wandered amid the smoldering remains of tents. Many appeared lost as they searched for relatives or friends, witnesses said.

Clean-up operations were launched quickly, with workers sweeping away the charred remains of hundreds of air conditioners, mattresses and burned pages of the Koran, Islam's holy book. Some tents are reinforced with wood and equipped with such amenities as air conditioners and stoves.

eating one of the most important meals of the day can help you improve test scores, attentiveness and behavior

Breakfast basics

STORY BY KARA LOWE . ART BY MATT HAWKINS

reakfast is the most important meal of the day, according to a recent study conducted at the University of

The results of this two-year study showed that students who ate breakfast every morning had significant improvements in test scores, attentiveness and behav-

"The results from the study at the University of Minnesota are not new ideas," Paula Peters, assistant professor and extension specialist, said.

"It proves that breakfast is the most important meal of the day. This is because sleeping a long time and not eating food deprives the body of needed energy. Eating breakfast provides the energy to get you through the day," she said.

Math test scores increased up to 16 percent, and reading test scores increased up to 10 percent for the students who ate breakfast. In addition, visits to the nurse's office declined by 30 to 60 percent, and discipline problems declined 40 to 50 percent.

The study also showed that skipping breakfast had an adverse effect on student's late-morning problem-

Peters said that one of the biggest reasons people skip breakfast is because they don't have time to prepare it, and they need to find something quick and easy

She suggests getting up 15 minutes earlier, preparing the food the night before and storing it in bags or in the refrigerator and eating foods like ready-to-eat cereal that take less than five minutes to prepare.

Other options include preparing a commuter breakfast to eat on the road and getting one's children involved with helping prepare the food or table to help make time for breakfast.

"Breakfast doesn't have to be the traditional toast or cereal. There is a wide variety of things people can eat in the morning, and it's OK to try new things for breakfast. What's important is eating something," Peters

She said pizza is a great non-traditional breakfast food. This is because it contains food from the bread and cereal group, vegetable group, meat group and dairy group.

Other non-traditional breakfasts include pudding, baked potatoes stuffed with leftovers, and peanut butter and jelly sandwiches. "Making pudding out of leftover foods and preparing it the night before is a quick and easy non-traditional breakfast. Use leftover grain products, mix with milk, fruit, an egg white, sweeten if desired and bake it. Put it in the refrigerator overnight, and it's ready to eat in the morning," Peters said.

She also suggests trying a breakfast pizza made from an English muffin or bagel. Using Canadian bacon rather than sausage or bacon reduces the fat.

"It is important to eat healthy, and breakfast is a part of that," Peters said.

Nutritious breakfast foods include high-fiber cereal, low-fat muffins, cooked cereal such as oatmeal, whole-grain breads such as rye, bagels, fresh fruit and

For a healthy, easy and fast breakfast Peters suggests putting high-fiber cereal mixed with dried fruit in a plastic bag the night before. "It will be ready to eat in the morning," she said.

'The Simpsons' CD captures spirit of weekly show

Exxxxxxxcellent.

The creators of "The Simpsons" have once again tried their hand at releasing a Simpsons compact disc with "Songs in the Key of Springfield." This time things are looking a little better than last time with the infamous "The Simpsons Sing the Blues." "Blues" was a nauseating little disc of shame that can now be found in any discount-chain store's $2 bin.

"Songs" is several notches above its sister CD, which should bring nothing but squeals of delight from its fans. The 38-track disc features some of the most hilarious songs and scene snippets, perfect for Manhattanites because "The Simpsons" is broadcast merely once a week here. Now we can remember our favorite episodes with a musical background while we wait for Sunday to roll around.

How about when Apu, Principal Skinner, Homer and Barney formed the barbershop quartet, the Be Sharps? Yep, "Baby on Board" is on the CD, complete with Homer saying at the end, "I'd like to thank you on behalf of the group, and I hope we passed the audition."

Then there was the time Apu got fired from the Kwik-E Mart for selling a filth-encrusted hot dog in the presence of an undercover camera ("This is just between you and me, smashed hat.").

"Who Needs the Kwik-E Mart?" leaves eyes damp when Apu croons at the end, "Who needs the Kwik-E Mart? I dooooooooo."

Then, of course, Homer is a bit angry over Apu's happy Broadway facade: "He lied to us through song. I hate it when people do that!"

What CD would be complete without a few songs from Mr. Burns? "Like My Vest?" reeks of puppy killing, but makes up for the social insensitivity in its chuckle-inducing lines. What PETA activist wouldn't laugh over lines such as "Like my loafers? Former gophers," all to the tune of "Be Our Guest," of "Beauty and the Beast" fame?

This CD can also appeal to those ringerwearin', Twister-playin' fans of the 1970s with its "Schoolhouse Rock" parody, "The Amendment Song." The cartoon featured a rolledup amendment on the capital steps, explaining himself to a bell bottom-wearing youngster.

"There's a lot of flag burners who have got to much freedom, so I want to make it legal for policemen to beat 'em," the gruff little amendment sings, provoking the following exchange between

Bart and Lisa:

"What the hell is this?" Bart asks.

"It's one of those campy '70s throwbacks that appeal to Generation Xers," Lisa says.

"We need another Vietnam to thin out their ranks a little," Bart responds wisely. "Songs" also gives that due nod to Homer's favorite beverage, beer. In the song "It Was a Very Good Beer," Homer sings about his first beer experience.

"When I was 17, I drank some very good beer I purchased with a fake ID. My name was Brian

The other delectable delight Homer sings about is honey-roasted peanuts. Food and drink: Who can go wrong? Of course, all homage for this compilation must be paid directly to Alf Clausen, the composer and songwriter for "The Simpsons." He sums the CD up best in the liner notes when he says, "I've included selections I feel will be the most memory-evoking for the legions of avid 'Simpsons' fans.'

So there it is. Now go buy "Songs" and do as Milhouse advises on the "Boy Scoutz N the Hood"

FAULTY REASONING

In October, the Washington Supreme Court reversed on a technicality the conviction of Benjamin R. Hull, who had been found guilty of defrauding the state worker compensation

Hull admitted that he got a friend to help him blast a hole in his left leg below the knee with a shotgun, but insisted it was not to get compensation (he received $96,000) but because the knee has been so painful to him since 1973 after it was injured

Five years earlier, he had tried to take the leg off with a chain saw, but got only part-way through because the saw kept malfunctioning

Legislators cut technology initiative

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

The proposed $7.5-million technology initiative for Kansas Board of Regents institutions has all but disappeared from the state budget.

Lawmakers in both the House and Senate lowered the funding from their proposed $4 million to $750,000 spread over five regents entities. The cut was made to fund the tuition gap created by the switch to linear tuition.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations, said that although there is little chance for the final omnibus budget bill to include more money for equipment, this session's course of events could be helpful for next year's session.

'We're a lot better off going back and asking for equipment next year," Peterson said.

Peterson said the regents institutions have demonstrated their need for new equipment this year and that will make it easier to sell to next year's legislature.

K-State's piece of the $750,000 equipment allocation amounts to $100,667 for the Extension Systems and Agricultural Research Programs, $15,000 for K-State-Salina, and $30,676 for the College of Veterinary Medicine. It includes no money for the main campus.

Peterson said the equipment cuts came in order to make up nearly $2.5 million in linear tuition gaps for fiscal years 1997 and 1998. She said the remaining $800,000 from the original $4-million equipment proposal was given to Pittsburg State University to help fund its new technology center.

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Man., said it's possible, but doubtful, the legislature will revive the equipment proposal this "Next year is a possibility, but next year's budget will be extremely tight," Glasscock said. "I was certainly disappointed to see technology go by the way-

"The prospects look dim now," he

Glasscock said it is important to keep in mind that Gov. Bill Graves' technology initiative was a one-time program and that the linear tuition base offset was clearly more significant.

However, Glasscock said he and other regents lawmakers would try to increase the $750,000 in the omnibus er practicing for weeks without a head coach, the K-State women's volleyball team finally found out who its next coach

In a press conference Wednesday, K-State Athletic Director Max Urick announced Jim McLaughlin will be the next head coach of the Cat squad.

"Jim led the pack all the way," Urick said. "He is totally into volleyball for the right reasons and those reasons are the team. Jim is an accomplished volleyball teacher, and I couldn't be happier to have him as the coach of our team.

McLaughlin began his coaching career with his alma mater, UC-Santa Barbara in 1984-85, where he worked with both the men's and women's teams.

In 1989-90, McLaughlin was named the head coach of the men's volleyball program at the University of Southern

In his first year at the helm, McLaughlin led a Trojan squad to a 26-7 record and a NCAA Championship. He followed that year with a 34-1 record and a second-place finish in the national championships.

After seven years at USC, McLaughlin moved on to Notre Dame where he took on the role of women's assistant volleyball coach. After just one year with the Notre Dame program, McLaughlin replaced

Jim Moore, who took the head coaching position at the University of Texas at McLaughlin will take over a Cat squad that in the past season finished 26-9 overall, fourth in the Big 12 Conference and made its first trip to the NCAA Tournament.

"This team is going in the right direc-tion," McLaughlin said. "We're going to be as good as we can be. I am going to do however much work it takes to take this team to the next level."

Many people were involved in the hiring process, including the players. Players spent about an hour each with the prospects asking a variety of questions. Players would then write down their thoughts about each coach but would not rate the coaches. Player remarks were then given to Urick. This past week, McLaughlin had a trial run with the Cat squad. During the week, he spent days coaching the team in

"When I came in here and trained with the girls, that really sold me," McLaughlin said.

Middle blocker Val Wieck said the atmosphere was a nice change for the

"He really coached us a lot in practice, and that is something we haven't had for the last four weeks really," Wieck said. "It was really a solid practice. We had warmups, drills, and he would tell us what we needed to do."

McLaughlin's coaching experience hasn't been limited to just the collegiate level. McLaughlin has had extensive coaching experience nationally.

He was the head coach of the U.S. men's team at the 1993 and 1995 World University Games and the 1991 U.S. team that took fourth at the Pan Am Games.

He also helped train the U.S. national team that took third at the 1994 World Championships, and he served as the team consultant for the U.S. men's team at the 1992 and 1996 Olympics.

Wieck said while McLaughlin's arrival wouldn't change much on the offensive end, it would mark a significant change in terms of defense.

"I think it will be a huge adjustment on the defensive side," Wieck said. "We are going to be putting much more emphasis on blocking. I think this will help take our game where it needs to go." McLaughlin said he knows he has big shoes to fill replacing Moore.

"Jim did a great job of gaining the team's trust," he said. "I know I am going to have to earn that trust. There is going to be some pressure on me to do that. I want to do the right things with preparation to have a great amount of success here," he said.

Pulitzer winner to give 109th Landon Lecture

RYAN O'HALLORAN

As a part of K-State's symposium, "The Legacy of Franklin D. Roosevelt," Pulitzer Prize winner Doris Kearns Goodwin will give the 109th Landon Lecture Tuesday, April 21 at 2 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Goodwin won the 1995 Pulitzer Prize in history for her book, "No Ordinary Time: Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt: The Home Front in World War II."

Goodwin will take part in the symposium on Tuesday morning with four other panelists and will represent a different view, said Don Mrozek, head of K-State's history department and symposium director.

'She represents the younger generation," he said. "She is also of special interest because we don't want the symposium to be just an exercise in history - that's why we emphasize the word, 'legacy.'

Almost all of Goodwin's résumé involves work on or with presidents. Before teaching government at Harvard for 10 years, Goodwin worked for Lyndon Johnson in his final year as president. Goodwin later wrote "Lyndon Johnson and the American Dream," and also "The Fitzgeralds and the Kennedys."

Outside of the presidential circle, Goodwin is an avid baseball follower and served as a consultant to Ken Burns on his PBS documentary on the history of baseball.

"One of the things about her is that she is a very frequent commentator on public affairs for public broadcast-

FDR symposium draws top experts

In conjunction with an early May dedication for the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial in Washington, D.C., the Department of History will bring in five internationally renowned FDR experts for a symposium titled "The Legacy of Franklin D. Roosevelt."

The festivities begin Monday and continue Tuesday. The first day will feature individual lectures, and Tuesday will have a more panel-audience interaction setup.

"The symposium brings together what may well be the most extraordinary collection of talent on FDR ever assembled," said Don Mrozek, history department head and symposium coordinator.

· Arthur Schlesinger Jr. is a twotime Pulitzer Prize winner and author of a three-volume series on Roosevelt. He is a professor emeritus in humanities at City University in New York.

· Doris Kearns Goodwin won the 1995 Pulitzer Prize for her book "No Ordinary Time: Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt: The Home Front in World War II." She has also written books about Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and is a regular commentator on Jim Lehrer's show on PBS.

· James MacGregor Burns won the 1971 Pulitzer Prize for history for his book "Roosevelt: The Soldier of Freedom." He is professor of government emeritus at Williams College in Massachusetts.

· William E. Leuchtenburg has written five books regarding the Roosevelt years and is a professor at the University of North Carolina.

· Manhattan resident Ken Davis is an adjunct member of the history department. He helped bring the other four experts to the symposium.

"Ken was able to help us greatly because, as an expert of the Roosevelt years, he has contacts with some of the key scholars in the field," Mrozek said. "The individuals who are coming in as guest speakers and panelists we were able to get because of Ken's intervention."

At 9:30 a.m. Monday at the Union Little Theatre, Davis gets things started, followed by Schlesinger at 10:30 a.m. In the afternoon, Burns and Leuchtenburg take center stage. Each will discuss a different aspect of Roosevelt's tenure.

Davis will discuss various economic and banking issues, and Roosevelt's regulation and de-regulation of the banking and financial institutions. Also in the afternoon, Leuchtenburg will discuss the Supreme Court crisis of 1937.

▶ CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

In an article titled "Support group established to help people with nervous disorder" in Wednesday's Collegian, information was incorrectly reported. Carolyn Hall-Tuiel did not start the support group. Doris Connelly did.

Reports are taken directly from the K-State and Riley County police departments' daily logs. We do not list wheel locks or minor traffic violations because of space constraints.

In Wednesday's Collegian, the story "Kassebaum Baker joins Huck Boyd" misidentified the part of the University that administers the Huck Boyd Institute for Rural Development. The College of Agriculture administers it.

In the story about KSU Theatre's production of "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," the character Madame Tourvel was misidentified as Madame Touvel. The play was adapted from a book, not a play as the article stated. The Collegian regrets these errors.

Piping-hot pizza smothered in tomato sauce and a thick layer of mozzarella cheese probably wouldn't be the first menu choice of a health-conscious diner. But someday it might be, thanks to K-State research scientists.

A new low-fat mozzarella cheese is being developed on campus To lower the fat content of the cheese, some of the milk fat has been replaced with soy proteins, Karen Schmidt, dairy technologist and associate professor of animal science, said. Some properties of the cheese are not quite the same as regular, commercial cheeses.

"It is not quite as yellow as commercial cheeses. We've studied commercial cheeses and they have a range of colors. Our cheese is sort of in the range of most commercial cheeses," Schmidt said.

The stretching and melting properties are also different than cheeses already on the market.

"There is a change in some of the properties because of the lack of fat," Schmidt said. "There was a challenge we faced developing low-fat foods with

Before the cheese is ready to be marketed, developers said, they want to conduct further testing on stretching, shelf life and flavor.

"Mozzarella cheese doesn't have a lot of taste, but we need to get some flavor enhancement," Schmidt said.

Researchers began development of the low-fat mozzarella cheese in fall

"We want to develop a product that nutritionally has the same components as real mozzarella cheese, but doesn't really contain the same ingredients," Schmidt said

The exact amount of fat grams the cheese contains has not been determined yet and will not be released until further data has been collected.

Farrell resources need higher priority resident Jon Wefald says his priority is academics, and alumni donors to K-State say they want to help build campus resources. But if the contents of Farrell Library are taken into account, their money isn't where their mouth is.

> They say academics take precedence over athletics, but the library is ranked near the bottom of the Big 12 and is losing funding and resources, while the money pours in for the football team and donors come out of the woodwork to create a new golf course.

Many donors of large amounts would rather spend their money on a pretty building or facility they can put their name on - hence the beautiful library in the middle of our campus with nothing in it.

One solution introduced by money-strapped library administrators is online journals, which allow researchers to read the table of contents of certain journals that offer the service and then to order the articles individually.

This is better than nothing, but it doesn't provide the depth and breadth of coverage necessary for good research. Without ready access to a wide variety of paper-in-yourhands journals, K-State's reputation as a good research university will slide down as low as its library ranking.

Perhaps if the University and its alumni were to make obtaining library resources as much a priority as its more high-profile projects, we could not only brag about a great library, but we could attract and retain the kind of quality faculty members that not only win teaching awards, but produce high-quality research.

At one time, the football team stunk, as the library resources do now. When K-State put its mind to it, a great turnaround occurred, and now we expect to go to a bowl

Now if those who control the University purse strings would put that kind of focus into the library's pathetic state of affairs, we could make another great turnaround.

The letter was right out of some great impersonal bowel of campus circulation. The Controller's Office was calling my name through a small plastic window on the envelope. I hadn't had any recent parking tickets, and I knew it was too late for a refund, so the hidden slip of paper could only carry one message: my graduation fee.

Yep, readers, you got it. I, along with every other graduating senior this spring, am joining my predecessors in paying K-State $15 so I might graduate from an institution where thousands of dollars have been pumped in by parents, loans and scholarships to pay for a degree. I'm realistic about the fact that I have to pay this fee.

President Jon Wefald, if he sees this column, will not come running out of his office, screaming "My God! Find a way to change this policy immediately!'

Frankly, I think the fact that people have to pay their college a fee to graduate is disgusting. I have decided to bill K-State for a few of my own fees, payable immediately. 1. The wait-in-line-for-an hour-and-a-half-atenrollment-but-then-only-for-10-minutes-at-fee-

MCC STUDENT DISAGREES WITH COLUMNIST

Editor,

This is in response to the column written by Russell Fortmeyer about Laramie Street closing on April 16. I agree with the fact that Manhattan has traffic problems and is laid out in an unique fashion, but that is the extent of where

First, I think the idea of comparing George Washington University to Manhattan Christian College is rather funny. GW consists of several city block whereas MCC consist of two.

Now to me, I can understand the fact that GW would cause traffic problem in a city of that size if you closed every street in the way. But let me ask you: Does the closing of one street, a block in section (that ends a block later), going to cause mass confusion?

I think not! In fact the new students will not even know the problem lies in those who have a habit of driving down Laramie to avoid lights. And it is not like Manhattan's driving is all that smooth anyway, as you pointed out in your column.

Second, to compare Manhattan to Washington, D.C. is absurd. You cannot even decide if Manhattan is an urban or suburban community. Manhattan is a nice-sized town, but by no means a metropolitan as

Ok. I looked at the size issue longer than I intended to, but what the hay! The size is not the main factor, anyway. It is convenience over the safety of pedestrians.

Yes, sir, we unite the school and also have the benefit of not having to dodge cars all day long. This safety is not only for MCC students but for the many K-Staters that walk across Laramie is going to do what they feel is in the best interest for the town of Manhattan. I do not think they are going to make a decision to "piss off motorists," as you so wisely said it. Thank for your time.

shame The stacks of books encyclopedias offered many entertaining and accurate nicknames for Kansas and its residents, but the end of the list always offered this meaningless nickname.

One encyclopedia even went as far as to say, "No one is certain what these names (Jayhawkers) mean, but they were used during a time of violent political conflict. The conflict over slavery led to such violence that newspapers of the 1850s called the area Bleeding Kansas." Hmm. That is an enticing walk down memory lane. I am sure this happy picture is what we would like representing our state. No need to worry about children getting too much violence on television, just call them Jayhawkers. I was thinking, to eliminate this less-than-delightful

Manhattan's baking institute gives students chance to earn quick degree, lots of dough

► More info.

The American Institute of Baking has been in Manhattan in 1919 for the purpose of promoting education in nutrition, the science and art of baking, bakery management and the allied sciences.

BRANDON ROMBERGER

For people interested in a career in the baking science industry, but who do not want to go to school for four years, the American Institute of Baking may be the place for them.

AIB has been in Manhattan since 1919 and is world renowned because it is the only school of its kind. It was formed to promote the cause of education in nutrition, the science and art of baking, bakery management and the allied sciences.

"We are a non-profit research and educational institution. We provide educational programs for the food processing and baking industry," Paul Klover, vice president of administration, said.

Darrell Brensing, vice president of education, said what separates them from everyone else in the world is that they teach the why's of baking

"We are teaching the trouble-shooting skills to fix problems," he said.

Brensing said if people bake some bread and it does not turn out the way they want it to, AIB does research to find out why.

More than 15,000 men and women have completed courses offered by the school. Brensing said there are two courses that most of the students take.

Baking Science and Technology can be completed in 16 weeks. It offers training in preparation for supervisory and management positions in baking industry.

Maintenance Engineering lasts only 10 weeks and offers practical and theoretical knowledge about maintaining complex bakery equipment.

Students learn about all the phases of refrigeration and troubleshooting.

"When you are looking at the students attending, it gives them the opportunity to gain experience in baking. It gives them an opportunity to move up," Brensing said.

AIB is owned by the baking industry with 90 percent of its funding coming from feegenerated programs. Since 1978, there have been 351 graduates

However, Brensing said there may be two to three K-State students taking the 16-week course each time it is offered.

"We have a good network with K-State,"

One third of the students at AIB are international. Another third is self-sponsored and the remainder are sent by companies. Brensing said 51 companies have sent employees to AIB for further training.

"These companies expect results. They will spend $25,000 to $30,000 after they pay a student's salary, tuition and benefits," he said.

AIB students have been placed all over the world due to the demand of people with their training.

He said everyone working in Taiwan at the China School of Baking in Taipei is a graduate of AIB.

The Japan School of Baking in Tokyo also has a high concentration of AIB graduates among their employees.

Brensing said he is happy with the support

AIB has received from K-State.

"I think we need to stress that the demand for our graduate is high. Any student who is looking for a career in a high-paying job, there are opportunities here in Manhattan," he said.

Integration of Jackie Robinson into majors touches K-State

Maybe it's fitting that this entire week in baseball has been dedicated to Jackie Robinson's integration into major leauge

Here is a guy who put the entire weight of his race upon his shoulders because he wanted to play baseball in the major leagues. Because it was not acceptable for him to just sit back and watch white people take control of a sport. Because he didn't want to be considered just another second-class citizen. Because he wanted to prove the nay-sayers wrong

But let's turn the tables close to home.

Harold Robinson was the first African. American to play football at K-State and the first of his race to be named all-conference in the Big Conference

JEREMY KELLEY is a sophomor in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Jeremy at (weasal 1@ksu.edu).

In 1948 Robinson graduated from Manhattan High School and was supposed to receive a scholarship from the Blue Key Honor Society to play football at K-State. But, I guess, for a second the University forgot Robinson was black.

The battle over the use of black athletes in the conference escalated when schools like Oklahoma and Missouri refused to enroll black athletes and strongly encouraged other schools to do the same With the heated arguments flying every which way, it became questionable whether or not Robinson would even come to K-State, so Blue Key pulled his scholarship. That did not halt Robinson's efforts to play football at K-State, He enrolled and learned that Coach Sam Francis would allow him to join the team. Robinson did not play, however, because freshman were ineligible at the time.

To support himself through school, Robinson worked two jobs, including one at Scheu's Cafe that earned him around $12 a week. When Francis left K-State the next year, it was unclear how Ralph Graham, the new coach, would remedy the situation. Graham went to Scheu's to ask the managers to fire Robinson so he could put him on scholarship, making him the first black athlete to receive any type of athletic scholarship in the Big 7.

After Robinson's integration, more and more black athletes began to filter into K-State - names like Johnnie Caldwell in basketball, Gene Wilson and Hubert Guest in track and Easter Elliot in baseball. But the biggest name that stands out now is a fella' by the name of Earl Woods, the father of Masters champion Tiger Woods.

Woods was not the first of his race to play the sport at K-State, but nevertheless, much has to be said about the accomplishments of Woods at K-State.

Woods, along with every other black athlete at the time, battled racial slurs while trying to compete in white man's sport. In his summer months while at K-State, Woods played on a town team,

The co-manager of that team, Charles Setterquist Jr., recalled the turmoil and angst Woods and those of his race endured in those years.

"We received plenty of static from the local people," Setterquist said. "They thought we should just play those who were local, and that blacks didn't need to play baseball. We were outside of town a little ways, but at times there was quite an uproar."

Apparently Woods was a decent player, because Setterquist heard about him and went into town one day to see if he wanted to play. Setterquist said it was mainly the other manager, Pete Hawkinson, who actually got Woods to play for Cleburne.

"We heard about some of these players from K-State," Setterquist said. "We finally got him out there and he joined us about half way through the season and then the next year."

That year was 1952 and Cleburne went 21-6, but the team then broke up. "There just wasn't enough talent around those parts after that year," Setterquist said. "A lot of the members disbanded and went other places and we just couldn't field a team anymore."

After that year Setterquist went up to Blue Rapids and played first base. Setterquist said Woods followed him for a few games, but left before the season was over to enlist in the U.S. Army.

So at a time when most are thinking of Robinson's legacy, think about the legacy that these athletes have made at K-State. It was these athletes who set a precedent for black athletes at K-State.

NFL DRAFT

Cowboys owner keeps Dallas' draft prospects secret

ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas - If Dallas coach Barry Switzer and personnel director Larry Lacewell feel any pressure to replace the depleted talent of the Cowboys, it doesn't show.

They were all smiles when asked about the upcoming draft. They couldn't say much, however, because of the strict gag order from owner Jerry Jones, who decided he'didn't want any secrets finding their way to the ears of NFL enemies.

This will be the first year in Cowboys history that they haven't had a predraft news briefing.

"I can't say anything about it," Jones said. "This could be a critical year for us.'

Not until Saturday can the lips of assistants be unsealed. Pressed about the matter, Lacewell coyly drew his finger across his lips like they were zipped.

"One would assume the Cowboys could use a wide receiver, a linebacker, an offensive lineman, help in the secondary and, of course, kickers to replace punter John Jett and placekicker Chris Boniol," a questioner said.

"You may assume all of the above," Lacewell responded. Indeed, the Cowboys are talented but lack depth. They can use help in just about every area. They've already signed free agent kickers Richie Cunningham, Danny Knight and Marshall Young, seeking a replacement for Boniol Dallas scouts took quarterback Troy Aikman on one of their forays to see if he saw any receivers he liked. Aikman threw to some receivers one day in California. Did he find anyone he liked?

"Yes," was all Lacewell would say.

The Cowboys, once again, are drafting down in the pecking order at No. 25 on Saturday.

The last two years they traded out of the first round and saved money against the salary cap. They also passed over some talent

This year, the Cowboys once again don't have much money to Dallas does need a receiver to help take the heat off Michael

The Cowboys drafted Stepfret Williams last year and he wasn't much help. He wasn't a disciplined route runner and had trouble catching the ball.

Deion Sanders was a bust as a receiver, catching only one touchdown pass and driving Aikman to distraction with his poor routes. Sanders will be used as a spot receiver this year because he'll miss training camp as he tries to revive his baseball career with the Cincinnati Reds Aikman would love to have Alvin Harper back if he gets cut by Tampa Bay.

Look for the Cowboys to sign a veteran receiver if they can't find one in the draft.

They also will have to sign another linebacker because of the possible losses of Darrin Smith and Jim Schwantz to free agency.

Despite nay-sayers, Jets have had draft success in past years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. - No team, not even the New York Jets, can mess up every draft.

While the Jets have had far more than their share of stinkers, they've also had some enlightened choices, both at the top and later in the draft And even after the draft: Their best receiver the last two seasons, Wayne Chrebet, was signed as a free agent out of Hofstra, where the Jets train. In 1989, the Jets grabbed linebacker Jeff Lageman of Virginia with the 14th pick.

The crowd at the draft screamed in disbelief, many of them not knowing who Lageman was. He turned out to be a fierce competitor and leader who moved to end and was a force throughout his six seasons in New York.

But, more in keeping with Jets tradition, he tired of all the coaching changes and lack of stability and signed with expansion Jacksonville. Last year, he played in the AFC Championship game while the Jets were 1-15.

The Jets' third-rounder in 1991 was Mo Lewis of Georgia. He's become a force at outside linebacker, although he had a poor season in 1996 - who didn't with the Jets?

Going further back, the Jets came up with winners in the first round: Matt Snell (1964), Joe Namath (1965), John Riggins (1971), Jerome Barkum (1972), Richard Todd (1976), Marvin Powell (1977), Marty Lyons (1979), Freeman McNeil (1981), Al Toon (1985) and Rob Moore (1990 supplemental, costing a 1991 No. 1). They got such key players for their 1969 Super Bowl championship team as Gerry Philbin (third round, 1964), Ralph Baker (sixth, '64), Verlon Biggs (third, '65), George Sauer (fifth, '65), Emerson Boozer (sixth, '66), Pete Lammons (eighth, '66), John Elliott (seventh, '67) and Randy Rasmussen (12th, '67) in middle or late rounds.

Of course, they also drafted a tight end named Rich Kotite in the ninth round in 1965. He'd later make his contribution to Jets lore as a coach.

Rasmussen came from Kearney, Neb., such a small program that he was considered a project for the future. Then Sam DeLuca, the starting guard, tore up his knee in the preseason and Rasmussen wound up a starter. With rare exceptions, he was in the lineup every game for 15 years.

Then there was Mark Gastineau, who was a pass-rushing terror at East Central Oklahoma. Hardly anybody knew about him before the Senior Bowl, where the Jets' staff was coaching. When a defensive lineman got hurt during Senior Bowl practices, Jets personnel director Mike Hickey insisted that Gastineau be

The Jets wanted to pick Gastineau in the third round of the 1979 draft after taking another defensive end, Lyons, with their first pick. But they knew Buffalo was interested.

The Bills ended up not taking Gastineau in the second round and the Jets sneaked in to grab him.

On Saturday, with the No. 1 pick in the draft, the Jets hope to repeat such good fortune.

Farrell Library to decrease budget by half-million dollars

Call the Office of Student Activities and Services at 532-6541, or stop by the office on the first floor of the K-State Student Union

In the next year, Farrell Library will cancel 1,000 journal subscriptions, which has already caused outrage among some of the faculty at K-State.

"Mathematicians have nothing else," Robert Burckel, professor of mathematics, said. "That is how we know what is going on in the world of mathematics.

"The library is our heart and soul. If someone starts messing with your heart, you get screwed up," Burckel said.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said there is going to be a decrease of $500,000, which is a quarter of the bud-

Hobrock said he understands most scholars depend on the printed word, but the library staff members are doing the best they can.

"There is a lot of good research going on here at K-State," Hobrock said. "Our job is to provide information 100 percent of the time. Right now we provide information about 50 percent of the time."

Hobrock said that is why K-State has an intra-library loan system, where students and faculty can borrow from other libraries around the nation. K-State ranks next to last in the Big 12 in the number of books and journals it owns.

"We fill a lot of needs during an intra-library loan," Hobrock said. Prices of journals are going up at a higher rate than inflation. "Subscription costs have increased 15 percent a year over the past 10 years," Hobrock said. "This is an abnormal rate, and K-State does not have the funding to stay up with inflation."

The average cost of a subscription for a scholarly journal is $300 per year, about a hundred of them cost about $1,000 a year each.

K-State has 1.35-million articles in the library.

To put that in perspective, Harvard has 14 million articles in its library.

Most articles that K-State acquires from other libraries cost $30. Most of the time, they are photocopies of the Hobrock sent out a survey last month to faculty members, asking them to write down every journal they believed they would use.

This way Hobrock will know what subscriptions the library can afford to drop without disturbing what the faculty uses on a day-to-day basis.

"Asking us to write down what we use changes on a day-to-day or week-toweek basis," Burckel said. "There is no way for me to know what I will need for my research in a month or so."

Hobrock said if faculty members do not return a survey, then he assumes they do not use any journals from the library. George Strecker, professor of mathematics, said he believed K-State is a research institution. "In the math area, our only tools are scholarly journals," Strecker said.

Jim Coffman, University provost, said the administration is trying to develop alternate strategies to help the library expand and grow. But he did not know what those might be.

Many of the faculty said they feel like the administration does not care and has diverted its attention elsewhere.

"Wefald has focused on the football program, not on the library during the last few years," Burckel said. "We are not dogging on Wefald. We just believe that he is a great PR tool for the University, and he has focused his attention elsewhere. He has done a great job, but it is time for a change in his atten-

"It is so bad that K-State does not qualify for membership into the Association of Research Libraries that most colleges' libraries are in," Hobrock said. Another significant problem is that taxpayers and the state government are unwilling to help support K-State's library.

'That is why we are trying to develop alternate ways to fill those needs," Coffman said. But he said those are unknown.

"The Internet or the World Wide Web is a great place to get authoritative scholarly information," Hobrock said. "This may be one of the areas that we can fill the needs of researchers.'

Hobrock said in 10 years, the library

Tobacco leaders Philip Morris, RJR Nabisco consider settlement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — After spending millions to defend itself, why would the tobacco industry suddenly sum talking settle-

For openers, they can end the mounting costs of battling lawsuits from 22 states and countless individuals, and control the threat of getting hit with one huge judgment after another.

They are paying lawyers some $600 million a year," said Marc Cohen, a tobacco analyst with Goldman, Sachs & Co. in New York. "There is risk attached to all of this litigation. ... That is sound motivation for the industry to try and seek a resolution.'

Philip Morris and RJR Nabisco, the nation's top two cigarette makers, are negotiating a settlement with eight states. It reportedly could cost as much as $300 billion during 25 years and require the industry to restrict its advertising, including characters like Joe Camel that appeal to children.

Such a settlement would cap the industry's liability and protect companies from lawsuits.

"It's sort of like paying protection

Since 1954, the tobacco industry had thwarted product liability and personal injury suits. But the number of cases has multiplied in the 1990s, particularly in Florida, where a 1994 law stripped most of the industry's legal defenses.

Goldman at Paine Webber blamed the lawsuits for turning tobacco stocks into poor performers. And threats from significant pension plans to dump tobacco stocks also encourage a settlement.

"What's to be gained is a much higher stock price," he said. "That's what we are talking about here.

According to a report released Wednesday by Salomon Brothers analyst Diana Temple, tobacco companies are most concerned with notential losses in individual cases like one being argued in Jacksonville.

Lawyer Norwood Wilner, who is suing R.J. Reynolds on behalf of the family of a woman who died from cancer after smoking for more than 30 years, said he has pushed for a settlement as long as it protects the rights of the injured parties.

But Wilner, who won a $750,000 settlement against Brown & Williamson last October on behalf of an ex-smoker, said he opposes legislation that makes it illegal to sue cigarette companies.

FDR fans want to honor his birthday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Fans of Franklin D. Roosevelt want to get his name on the nation's holiday calendar, linking him to George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

The only president honored by a federal holiday is Washington. His Feb. 22 birthday is commemorated the third Monday in February, a day commonly referred to as

The federal law passed in 1968 that established the Monday holiday mentions only Washington, but in many areas the day also honors Lincoln, whose birthday was Feb.

"It's a very uncertain holiday in our country," said Peter Kovler, one of the signers of a full-page advertisement in Wednesday's New York Times calling for formal inclusion of Lincoln and Roosevelt in the February holiday.

Roosevelt's birthday was Jan. 30. He was elected to four terms as president and served in that office longer than any other person.

Roosevelt took office in 1933 in the depths of the Depression and served until his death in April 1945, shortly before the end of World War II. The ad was in the form of an open letter to President Clinton and Congress. It ran 16 days before dedication of the Roosevelt Memorial on the Mall within walking distance of the Washington Monument and the Lincoln and Jefferson

"President Clinton has repeatedly grouped the three presidents as our greatest leaders. Speaker (Newt) Gingrich has encouraged Americans to see FDR as a model of greatest leadership," said the open letter.

"I believe the memory of Franklin Roosevelt is vital for this country," said Kovler, who served as chairman of the Roosevelt Centennial committee in 1982. Kovler said a family foundation contributed $500,000 toward the cost of building the Roosevelt Memorial.

Everybody acknowledges the greatest Republican in American history is Abraham Lincoln and everyone acknowledges the greatest Democrat is Franklin Roosevelt," he said. "The greatest president of the 19th century is Lincoln and everyone cites now Franklin Roosevelt as greatest of the 20th century."

Focusing greater attention on the achievements of Lincoln and Roosevelt and their roles as politicians might help alleviate public cynicism about government and poli-

"I've never seen the country so cynical about the presidency or government or politicians," he said. Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., another signer of the open letter, said he tried to introduce legislation last year to amend the law to have the third Monday in February include Lincoln and Roosevelt, whose birthday was Jan. 30

Yates' bill was ruled in violation of a directive from Gingrich, R-Ga., barring commemorative bills. The House speaker issued the order to end the flood of legislation commemorating events great and small that for years routinely passed Congress.

Yates said the House parliamentarian tried but failed to find a way to get around the order. He said he might try to attach it to an appropriations bill and hope that no House

Goodwin joins the other four speakers Tuesday for a panel discussion at 9:30 a.m. in Union Forum Hall. At 10:45, retired Kansas Senator Nancy Kassebaum Baker joins the discussion. Kassebaum is the daughter of Alf Landon, who was defeated by Roosevelt in the 1936 presidential elec-

"The panel discussions can be very promising on Tuesday," Mrozek said. "It will involve a lot of interacting between the panel and the audience."

Mrozek said the symposium should draw interest from a wide range of people - from history majors to those with business-oriented careers.

"In a sense, what constitutes a high point for somebody depends on where you're interest lies," he said.

Festival to teach 4th graders about water quality

On Friday, Manhattan Town Center will be overrun with fourth graders for the Children's Water

The festival, sponsored by K-State and organized by College of Education students, will provide an opportunity for fourth graders and their parents to learn about water quality, Ben Smith, associate professor of elementary education, said.

Between 12 and 15 agencies — such as the Environmental Protection Agency - will have booths throughout the mall from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., providing hands-on experiences that teach the students about water quality, Smith said. The purpose is not to make the students scientists.

These displays will be facilitated by state and federal agencies and K-State students, who will also be serving as guides and timekeepers for the

An estimated 200 to 300 fourth graders will visit the mall for the water festival.

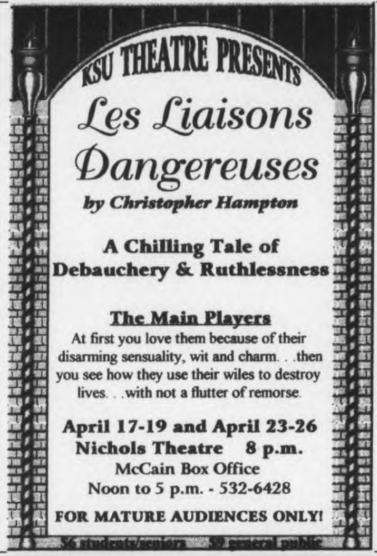

Since water is the second-most vital substance for human needs, it is important that grade school children know the importance of protecting water supplies from point and non-point pollution sources, Smith said.

Kansas has been said to have the most polluted water supplies in the nation, creating the need for more education, Smith said.

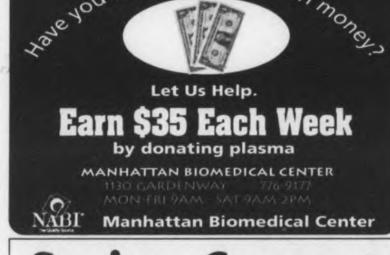

Fourth graders are the target audience because their curriculum in school is directed toward geography and environmental qualities.

Smith said Manhattan schools, along with schools included in the Kansas and Lower Republic River basins, have been invited to Friday's festival.

This year's festival is a first-time event, but others of its kind will be developed if this proves to be a viable way of educating youth on water quality and environmental protection, Smith said.

lifetime investment purchasing life insurance

STORY BY SARA EDWARDS

ART BY BILL KRAAI

aren Ballard, Kansas Farm Bureau agent, said she wished she had started a life insurance policy when she was in college, but nobody ever told

Ballard said she recommended that college students invest in wholelife insurance.

She said many of her clients started life insurance while they were still in college.

"That's when a lot of them started, if they're smart," Ballard said. Depending on a person's needs, life insurance can provide protection as well as an opportunity for investment.

Many kinds of life insurance are available, such as term and wholelife insurance.

Term insurance lasts for a limited period of time. People buy term policies if they are in some kind of debt, so their debt can be repaid if they die.

Group term policies are also used by employers who want to provide coverage for their employees. Jeff Kruse, partner at Charlson and Wilson Insurance Agency and K-State finance instructor, said some companies will provide insurance for employees for as long as they are employed.

But they aren't covered after they quit or retire unless they can continue their policy on their own, which isn't always the case. Ron Lemon, State Farm Insurance agent, said term life insurance is good for college students or younger clients because the premiums are lower, but eventually he would recommend some kind of whole-life plan.

Premiums for term insurance usually increase with age, while wholelife plans can have a flat rate that doesn't increase. Kruse said there is a saying that people should buy term and invest the rest, because term is least expensive. But, he said, this only works if people invest the money they save. Depending on whom you talk to and the kind of policy in question, whole-life insurance can be a great investment or just good protection. There are options when it comes to the kind of whole-life policy. People can pay a premium for coverage, or it can include a savings

Ballard said she recommends a whole-life policy with a savings account attached to it. She said life insurance is a good investment for college students, even if they only have a small amount of money to

The money paid for insurance is minimal compared to the return on the investment. The interest rates are higher in a life-insurance policy than a normal savings account, but it is less risky than mutual funds, Ballard said. 'You can't believe how much that accumulates," she said.

Ballard said another advantage is access to savings invested in a life insurance policy. She said these savings can be especially helpful for buying a house or other big expenses.

Lemon said there are other types of whole-life insurance that are more flexible. Some policies might have premiums that change or can be invested in mutual funds.

He said the kind of policy really depends on a person's needs. People with families will want insurance to protect their dependents, but single people also need life insurance to cover things like funeral expenses. He said life insurance can be a good investment, but people should also invest their savings in other avenues. "There is a fit for everyone. The fit might change over time depending on circumstances," he said.

Album blends hard edge with southern-rock roots

REVIEW BY BRANDI HERTIG

Deeply rooted in its own version of 1990s southern rock, Wilco's sophomore release, the two-compact disc set "Being There," is sure to delight fans, as well as draw in some new ones.

Disc one and disc two probably could have been released as separate albums altogether.

Disc one, with the exception of three songs, has a much harder edge to it than disc

It could be labeled as the more mass-marketable of the two, but the songs are not true to Wilco's form. Hard and loud by most standards, disc one somehow misses the Wilco boat.

The three songs on disc one that are more musical are gems. "Forget the Flowers" has a nice down-home, almost bluegrass sound to it, making a staple of the banjo and a subtle snare drum back

"What's the World Got in Store" is more mellow than "Forget the Flowers," using solely a banjo through the first portion of the song. "In Store" also makes use of background harmonization and organ music, which adds an odd yet satisfying texture to the mix.

"Far, Far Away" sounds almost like a Neil Young tune, with harmonica at the beginning and interspersed throughout. The delicate use of slide guitar underneath the melody creates a soothing country feeling.

Disc two is where the real meat of the album is. The second track, "Someday Soon," is a true southern rock song, with its ingenious blending of banjo, guitar, organ and sweet background harmonization. The chord changes are simple enough, leaving the focus on the vocals.

The beginning of the following song, "Outta Mind (Outta Sight)," really sounds like the theme to "Sesame Street," back when the beginning still featured kids in corduroy running around with Barkley. It's a light, catchy tune, but not really worth mentioning, except for the whole "Sesame

The rest of the disc is similar in its sound, whereas disc one is a bit more eclectic in its scope. The beauty of the two discs is that there's some-

Artists explore body, soul through art show

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Every human condition can be traced to two basic components: body and soul And while it may be ideal to balance one's interests for both components, artists Angiela Meyer and Beth Duvall choose to concentrate on only one. Together, their work will be in a Bachelor of Fine Arts exhibition in the Willard Gallery until

Where the painter, Meyer, seems more interested in the intangible qualities of existence, the sculptor, Duvall, explores - rather microscopically the corporeal properties of the human condition. Both artists rely on hard (squares and points) and soft (arches and free-forms) architecture to define their work

Meyer, who has shown extensively (for a student) in Manhattan throughout her eight years of study, has included only her very recent work in this show.

Her paintings - all but a few are oil on wood panel - keep consistent with her earlier concern for the ethereal in life. At her best, her work recalls the minimalist color paintings of Mark Rothko - diminishing all the elements of a painting save color. Even the missing conventional frame suggests Rothko

The minimalist quality is particularly true of the work "Her Features Covered by Her Fallen Gown," which pulses with a deep red framed with black. The black framing is found in other works.

Meyer studied the subtle symbols of early Christian iconography while living in Italy, and various examples (snails, arched portals, peaches) show up in her work.

"They are not in the background, but as part of my visual vocabulary, I bring them to the forefront," Meyer

As for the arched portals, Meyer sees them as passageways, but also as quasi-tombstones signifying the end of a process or cycle.

Where Rothko's brushstroke is even and sometimes feathered, Meyer is much more expressionistic, occasionally relying on the rough qualities of the wood for subtle texture.

"It made sense to paint on wood because there are layers after layers of paint just as there are rings to the wood," Meyer said. "The painting itself becomes an extension of the wood."

Meyer's wit is present in "Self Portrait as the Archangel Gabriel," a mixed media on wood panel that includes photographic cut-outs of the artist affixed to a print of an early icon of the angel, whose eyes act as those of Meyer.

If this is Meyer's witty way of suggesting a greater spirituality of the self. or the gift of spiritual insight, it succeeds well. And where it leaves off, Duvall picks up.

Duvall's "Soul Parasite (I.M.O. Michael Mastranardi)," steel (1995), and "Spore," steel and copper (1995), are paradoxically contrasting in style, the former being a playful parasitical ovalistic ball with flowing hairs, and the latter being an ominous globe with sharp metal piercing through its exterior structure revealing a dangerous and foreboding interior.

Are there such things as "friendly"

Duvall's oversized sculpture, recalling the work of Claes Oldenburg in a grotesque way, confrontationally presents itself to the viewer - delicately sculpted in form and pensively real in

The desert recluse. The woman who paints flowers.

In a world deluged with pop-culture images with universal appeal, society has the ability to deflate the contributions of a genius - in this case artist Georgia O'Keeffe, whose "Red Poppy" graces a postage stamp - into one singular perception.

O'Keeffe, whose early abstract watercolors appear in the exhibition "Georgia O'Keeffe: Canyon Suite" at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, lived her artistic career mostly out of the New York spotlight. And while she went to extraordinary lengths to control the reputation of her work, she is now the most popularly celebrated of all women artists.

Her life and the importance of her early work were the focus of Charles Eldredge's evening lecture Wednesday at the Beach art museum. Eldredge is considered the foremost O'Keeffe scholar, and he provided a historical essay in the original catalog to the "Canyon Suite" show, now at the Beach art museum until April 27.

Eldredge began his scholarship on O'Keeffe as a graduate student in the 1960s. At this time, he said the artist's reputation was at its low point, and she was very accessible to him. "It wasn't as ubiquitous a body of work or she such a high-profile, legendary figure as she has become now," he said.

It wasn't until 1970, with a large show at the Whitney Museum in New York, that O'Keeffe's second career, as Eldredge calls it, flowered simultaneously with the women's movement.

"It was a different role for her," he said. "She did not want to become a woman artist. She said she wanted to be remembered as a painter."

The flower-obsessed O'Keeffe of calendars and posters is worlds apart from her formative years, teaching art at West Texas State Normal College in the middle 1910s in Canyon, Texas.

Eldredge illuminated the details of O'Keeffe's simple watercolors, discussing the freedom of her brushstrokes and bleeds, the fact that none of the watercolors overlay pre-drawing, generalized forms and the free use of color that defines the landscapes and figures of the work.

"The spaciousness of the west Texas plains was a revelation," Eldredge said, while discussing the significance of O'Keeffe's self-discovery in Eldredge also pointed out O'Keeffe's contemporary influences as ev-

Stovall urges constitutional amendment

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall urged a somewhat reluctant U.S. Senate on Wednesday to enshrine in the Constitution an amendment giving victims the right to be heard and take part in some criminal proceed-

Stovall, one of two state attorney generals to testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee, said that 15 of the 27 amendments to the Constitution protect the rights of people charged with crimes.

"That imbalance is pretty extraordinary," Stovall said in an interview before her appearance. "I wouldn't advocate eliminating any one of the 15 protections that are in the Constitution given to the accused. It's not victims versus defendants. It's simply, give victims those basic rights to be notified and to be heard."

Stovall, a Republican, testified in favor of a proposed amendment that essentially guarantees crime victims rights to know about and appear at a defendant's court proceedings, to obtain restitution, to know about a convict's escape or prison release and to have the victim's safety considered in any decision about a convict's release.

Kansas voters adopted a constitutional amendment in 1992 that gives victims the right to be informed about a defendant's court case, to be present during the proceedings and to be heard at sentencing. The federal version, however, would go much further.

Several senators expressed reluctance at Wednesday's hearing to tinker with the Constitution despite the popularity of victims rights, saying Congress could pass laws to achieve much the same thing.

"The Constitution is not a legal code on which we should legislate policy," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. "It is not a bulletin board for attaching policy positions, no matter how appealing the positions are."

Committee Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, urged his colleagues to consider public policy issues before adopting an amendment, such as whether it might impede police work and whether it would increase costs of prosecution.

"We should not lightly conclude that a problem is so overwhelming or so intractable that legislation is inadequate to correct injustices we face," Hatch said. But Stovall said the Kansas Legislature had passed a largely ineffective law on victims rights in 1988, and it took the state constitutional amendment to get the attention of the criminal justice system. For this reason, she said the U.S. Constitution should afford the same protections.

The main amendment pending in the Senate was introduced by Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., and Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and it has been endorsed by President Clinton.

Attorney General Janet Reno outlined a new administration proposal Wednesday that would set up a way for victims to track their attackers' cases and give them rights to attend juvenile delinquency hearings, in addition to some of the other protections.

Stovall expressed optimism that a version of the amendment would eventually pass, even though it must win twothirds approval in both houses of Congress and be ratified by threefourths of the 50 states.

"If it was up to the people across the country, I think it would pass," she said. "It has a tremendous amount of favorable support."

play "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" in Nichols Theatre 18th-Century play parallels '90s

Liaisons Dangereuses," by Christopher Hampton, opened Thursday night at Nichols Theatre. Only one-third of the seats were filled.

The play was about two ex-lovers, La Marquise de Merteuil, played by Jill Huguet, graduate student in theater; and Le Vicomte De Valmont, played by Paige Smith, junior in theater, who plotted against others for their amusement. The play was set in France in the 18th Century.

Their goal in the play was for Valmont to seduce a young virgin and for Merteuil to destroy a young wife. The two worked together and used sexual manipulation in their evil endeavors. But the plot backfired on Valmont when he fell in love with the young virgin and found that Merteuil was plotting against him all along.

Although the play took place in the 1780s, some content parallels the 1990s.

Some parallels could be seen with the sex content. It seemed that almost every female character slept with the main character, Valmont. Merteuil seemed to have a track record herself, although not shown in the play.

The play was hard to follow at times because of the 18th-Century language that was used. The sex scenes and breasts almost overflowing the top of the dresses was distracting at times, too.

The cast members proved to be talented actors. There were very little stutters, and the script flowed very well. The cast also seemed to have a good chemistry with each other, although their gestures seemed to be stiff at times.

The music fit the play perfectly. It started out with light romantic-era music. As the plot thickened, the music turned into a darker gothic tone. It really kept the music in context. The dark colors of the set fit with the deviance of the play. Black sheer drapes were hung in the background.

A lounge, used also as a bed in a lot of scenes, had a black velvet cushion on top. The elegant black velvet chairs surrounding the white antique table and desk also added to the scene.

The costumes, designed by Dana Pinkston, assistant professor of speech, fit the time period of the play very well.

The women wore mainly cream-colored dresses with tightly fit corsets that cinched their waists and uplifted their busts. The dresses had hoop skirts with material that flowed easily. They were very elegant.

The men wore authentic costumes as well. A lot of riding pants and tights were worn along with coats with tails.

Although the play had some distractions, it was overall well done. It is cautioned, however, that the play is not intended for young audiences.

Cold temperatures should not damage Kansas wheat crop

Recent cold temperatures might have some farmers worried about the possible freeze damage to their wheat

Wheat goes through a process of cold hardening in the fall that increases its resistance to cold during the winter. according to the Agriculture Experiment Stations and Extension Service

It loses its cold hardiness when it starts growing again

Temperatures slightly below freezing can severely injure wheat at the reproductive stages and reduce grain

Prolonged exposure to freezing causes much more injury than brief exposure at the same temperature.

Several hours of exposure to temperatures around 20 to 24 degrees causes moderate to severe damage when wheat is at the jointing stage, according to the Extension Service. Jointing is when the growing point, or head, of the wheat stem comes above the surface of the ground.

The cold temperatures that began earlier this month might have caused crop damage, Jim Shroyer, extension specialist in crop production at K-State, said.

Temperatures dropped to the teens in west central and northwestern Kansas.

'The big concern was, was the wheat far enough along that it would cause any damage?" Shroyer said.

Experts think there might be a little bit of damage in those two areas because west central Kansas was about 25 percent jointed and 11 percent of the wheat in northwest Kansas was jointed, Shroyer said.

"As the growing point moves up the stem, it becomes more vulnerable to freeze damage," he said.

The most severe temperatures occurred Friday night and Saturday morning, as the low temperatures dropped to single digits in this region, Shroyer said.

We've had cold weather before, but nothing this cold, this late in the season," he said.

Saturday afternoon a lot of snow melted in west central and northwest Kansas, but snow cover helped Saturday morning in those areas

Damage might still be seen, but it won't be as severe as it would have if there was no snow coverage.

Shroyer said the snow wasn't as uniform near Colby and Oakley, so some damage can be seen.

In 1995, an April 11 freeze damaged parts of western was further along and temperatures didn't get as low. This year the wheat wasn't as far along, but the temperatures were much colder, Shroyer said.

Northeast Kansas had about 25 percent of the wheat jointed, and overall the state is a little ahead of the fiveyear average.

"Last year it was only three percent, so we are way ahead of last year, and slightly ahead of the overall average," Shroyer said. There might be damage in the Manhattan area, but nothing like the southwest part of the state, he said.

Southwest Kansas was about 65 percent jointed, but the cold weather didn't reach that part of the state Sunday. However, the cold temperatures moved into the area

Tuesday, making the wheat more vulnerable to freeze dam-

"The big wreck is in southwest Kansas. Already we're seeing stems that are split open, stems that have collapsed and the stem integrity is lost. The growing point looks OK, but it doesn't take long before the growing point gets mushy," Shroyer said.

To reduce the sales of tobacco products to minors, the Food and Drug Administration has implemented new regulations restricting youth access.

Anyone purchasing tobacco products who looks younger than 26 years old is required to show identification.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has also recently released public service announcements to be aired by television stations throughout the state. The PSAs demonstrate the neg-

ABC News conducted a nationwide poll of smokers under the age

They found that the average age for beginning smokers was 12-1/2 years old. Nearly half of the smokers polled said they were hooked by age 15.

The KDHE estimates that 11,000 Kansas youths start smoking cigarettes every year.

"Addiction to tobacco is an adolescent epidemic as virtually no one initiates its use after the age of 20. Making it more difficult for youth to obtain tobacco products should have an impact on their use," Potsic said.

A recent study conducted in Maryland showed that the current methods to restrict the sales of tobacco to youth are not working. and that the new FDA regulations are necessary.

The study found that, despite the sales of tobacco products to persons under 18 being illegal, youth were still able to purchase cigarettes at more than 50 percent of stores and other outlets.

MIAMI - Leading figures in the drive to regulate tobacco as a dangerous drug warned today against giving cigarette makers blanket protection from the lawsuits that have pushed them into settlement talks.

"I would have grave reservations about giving this industry immunity," David Kessler, outgoing commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, said on ABC's "Good Morning America.

"I think it is very difficult to deal with people that have lied to us for three decades," former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said in arguing against immunity on the same show. "I think we've got to keep our focus on the fact that this is a public health issue, not a financial issue.

Analysts say it just made good business sense for the nation's two largest tobacco companies and tobacco litigants to enter into secret settlement talks. which were acknowledged Wednesday. The threat of huge judgments, legal setbacks and jittery stock prices - not a dence of smoking's addictiveness. But now the industry faces a mountain of litigation, from individuals as well as nearly half the attorneys general in the United States. Even shareholders have sued, claiming stock prices were overvalued because the companies failed to disclose damaging information on smoking hazards. Revenues were $45 billion last year, but stock prices were jumpy might be the straw that broke Camel's nonetheless.

It was under these kinds of financial and legal pressures that Philip Morris Cos. and RJR Nabisco Holdings Corp. began talks of a settlement with eight of 23 states seeking to recover smokingrelated health costs. Alaska on Monday became the latest state to sue.

The tobacco companies also lost two state court rufings this week. A Louisiana judge on Wednesday certified for trial a class-action lawsuit that would enable lawyers to seek damages directly from cigarette makers for hundreds of thousands of smokers all at once. No such trial has been allowed, since an appeals court rejected that approach at the federal level last May. And in Pascagoula, Miss., a judge ruled Tuesday that any money the state saved from early deaths of smokers on lower pension costs, for example cannot be considered as offsetting the COUNTY COMMISSIONER FACING HEALTH STRESS KILLS HERSELF.

OVERLAND PARK - Johnson County Commissioner Elaine Beckers Braun, despondent over health problems and business stress, drove to a suburban parking lot and shot herself in the head, police said Thursday.

Braun, 55, was found dead on the grass in front of her car Wednesday evening in the parking lot of the NCAA headquarters. She died of an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound, Police Chief John Douglass said Thursday at a news conference

Police found several notes addressed to Braun's family, friends and constituents in her red Ford Mustang, Douglass said.

Douglass described the notes as genuinely warm and sincere and said they indicated Braun chose the parking lot of the National Collegiate Athletic Association because of its beautiful, scenic view.

The song was written by band member Mark Miller, who was a friend of Berringer. The band was supposed to play the song at a ceremony in Lincoln last year to honor the Huskers for their second national championship, but the celebration was canceled after Berringer's death.

WOMAN WHO PLEADED GUILTY TO FARM FRAUD SENTENCED TO 15 MONTHS IN PRISON.

WICHITA - Three months after her father was found innocent of defrauding the U.S. Department of Agriculture of millions, a federal judge sentenced Gina Herrmann to more than a year in prison for the same alleged scheme.

Under a plea bargain, federal prosecutors had recommended 18 months of home confinement and a $200,000 fine for Herrmann, U.S. District Judge Dale Saffels agreed to order Herrmann to pay the $200,000 fine, but rejected the home

Saffels noted Herrmann, 33, of Garden City, refused to take a lie detector test in the case of a witness accused of bribery, and he sentenced her to concurrent 15-month sentences on one count of mail fraud and one count of making a false statement.

Herrmann pleaded guilty in December, about a month into a trial of both her and her father.

The program was strictly a volunteer effort at the time. Its goal was to increase awareness of AIDS and other STDs, provide information to students and generate better health practices.

In fall 1993, the program was approved as a class. Students take the three credit-hour class as an elective, and are required to commit to the program for two semesters. This allows new students to be trained while previous students continue giving programs.

"Most of the students come back after their two semesters are up," said Reita Currie, Assistant Director of Health Education and Promotion for Lafene. "They become committed to the group.'

e K-STATE ATHLETES NEED POSITIVE RECOGNITION

There are many glorifying things K-State athletes do, but the moment they make a mistake, no matter how big or small, I feel the situation is blown way out of proportion. Why is this? This is the question that I am posing to you about the K-State athletes.

It has been my experience that any time an athlete has done something good, the deed is absent from the press - unless the deed was recognized by the conference or received national exposure.

Athletes are often not recognized for their achievements. There are many fundraisers within the community in which athletes are involved, yet no one can recognize them.

There may be a little note written about it in the newspaper but never a huge article with an interview or intense coverage by the Collegian.

When a regular student does something that is noticeable, it is in the paper and not overlooked. Humans do make mistakes, and the last time I checked athletes fall in that category. Athletes being in the plain view of the public eye is no excuse for their exploitation.

We give hours of our lives to K-State and its athletic programs and contribute to the success that has been accomplished. Yet, we rarely receive praise for personal

Organ donation equals ULTIMATE FORM OF GIVING, RECYCLING

CHAN JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail com-

OK, I know that I'm not the only one who does this. You're just hanging out, more than likely waiting for something or someone, like at the bus stop or in line at the post office. Sound familiar?

You're bored. You'd rather be doing something else. There's no television here, unless you're in the post office, in which case the television is showing only the Post Office Channel or whatever, filled with advertisements for the latest stamps and mug shots of the FBI's Most Wanted.

You decide to read, but of course you didn't bring anything with you. You didn't think it was going to take this long. The posters on the walls and the bus schedule make for ments to Jeff at (defcon 1@ksu.edu). pretty dull fare, so you stare at your shoes. Shoes-as-text, however, does not appeal to you as it might to some others, so you decide to go through your wallet (or purse or bag as the case may be). You know what I'm talking about. If I didn't go through my wallet looking for reading material at least once or twice a year, I'd still be carrying around expired credit cards and outdated insurance IDs. Let's see, flip past the library cards, on to my Federal Communications Commission operator's permit, followed by my student ID, then the driver's license another bad hair day, immortalized on a field of blue. Take it out of its slip, read all the stuff on the front, and then turn it over.

"I hereby make anatomical gift effective upon my death."

I read the line over and over again, as well as the words beneath: "Date" and "Signature of Donor" and "Witness." All these lines are blank, and have been since I got my driver's license back in high school.

I'm not against organ donation. In fact, I support it. Who wouldn't? When you're dead, you have no use for anything you leave behind, including your body, right?

But other people do need it. People in need of heart or liver transplants, and people suffering kidney and lung failure. Burn victims who need skin grafts, and those blinded, by accident or disease, who As of December 1996, 34,595 patients were awaiting kidney transplants, 7,433 needed liver transplants, 3,721 heart transplants and 2,314 lung transplants, according to the United Network for Organ Sharing. These, plus numerous others in need of various organ transplants, totaled more than 50,000 patients.

The number of patients, especially those in critical, end-stage organ failure, awaiting desperately needed transplants have always exceeded the supply of donated organs.

pleted. A goodly number, to be sure, but a far cry shy of 50,000.

In 1995, only 19,145 transplants, from both living and deceased donors, were com-Almost all the significant organs are donatable. The heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, pancreas, intestines and eyes are potentially transplantable after a brain death, while bone, skin, corneas, heart valves, veins and other soft tissues are potentially transplantable after a cardiac death.

All donated organs are procured by trained hospital surgeons, and a donor's family is never responsible for paying for any of the transplant procedure.

Organ distribution is nationally coordinated. Regional organ banks, linked to a national computer database, help speed up the process of matching donors and recipients. All patients have equal access to donated organs, and patients with the highest need have the highest priority for receiving an organ. Neither age nor medical history need interfere with the decision to donate. All the popular religions support organ donation. Organ and tissue donation does not interfere in any way with funeral arrangements. And, if nothing else, donated organs and tissues can be used for medical research if they will not be transplanted.

The procedure for donating is so simple. No legal paperwork is involved. Simply signing the back of your driver's license or a uniform donor card is enough.

So, why the hell haven't I signed? The answer is so simple, it's elusive. Who wants to face the prospect of his own death, especially when he feels immortal?

You are going to die. So am I. Maybe today or tomorrow. Next week, or 50 years down the road. Maybe 200 years down the road (that's my plan).

My younger sister, Rachael, was killed in a motorcycle accident in 1992

She understood that the old environmentalist slogan "Recycling saves lives" holds true for more than aluminum cans. And right now, at least two complete strangers, people just like us, are alive because of her compassionate gifts.

National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week is next week, April 20-26. Reread this column carefully. Go down to Lafene Health Center or your local hospital for more information, or contact the Midwest Organ Bank at (913) 262-5130.

I'm gonna sign that card, today.

Then I'm gonna put it back in my wallet and back in my pocket. But not before flipping through it one more time, past the IDs and credit cards and whatnot, to the picture of Rachael I keep there.

My eyes linger and remain for a long, long time.

India has more to offer than people might think

SHOBA SHARAD RAJGOPAL is a graduate student and graduate teaching assistant in the A.Q. Miller

School of Journalsim and Mass tions. Prior to her arrival at K-State, she was a news reporter and anchor for networks in her home country. She has traveled widely and written about her travels for various Indian magazines and newspapers.

April is a time of great festivity in India, as this is the time of the year when a number of communities there celebrate New Year's Day. In connection with this, Indian Students Association will have a celebration on Friday, "Utsav" (Festival), with music, dancing and of course, fabulous cuisine.

So this is the right time for me to share some aspects of India with all of you, my American friends and colleagues.

When I was asked to write this article about my country, I wondered what aspect of India to bring out. Should I write about its culture and tra-consult an American friend at K-State. "Oh no," she protested. "Don't you think it would be far ditions, the richness of its ancient civilization? I decided to more relevant to do a piece on modern India and the kind of developments you have there? After all, all that most people here know about India is that you have 'sacred cows' there!" Holy cow! She was on the ball! Hadn't I encountered this myself, upon arrival in this country?

The puzzling lack of awareness of most Americans about India, I now attribute not to their own insensitivity, but to the media which deliberately ignores everything positive that is happening in India and indeed in much of Asia and Africa.

So what is modern India like, anyway? It might interest people here to know that when a bill was sought to be passed by the Senate, curbing the entry of computer scientists from the Indian sub-continent, Bill Gates, the Microsoft guru, sent an impassioned plea to Washington urging it to rethink its decisions. This was done because if the U.S. were to curb the entry of computer scientists from India, the computer industry in this country would be seri-

Sounds farfetched? Think again. India has a software industry which reported sales worth $1.2 billion in 1995-96 (April-March), and is expected to grow by 50 percent the next year. As a matter of fact, a recent World Bank survey reveals 82 percent of U.S. corporations make India their first source for out-sourcing software needs. To put that in layperson's terms, these U.S. corporations want to develop their software in India by Indian companies and Indian programmers.

Indeed, many of the finest scientists, doctors, engineers and computers specialists in this country are of Indian origin. Further, according to data developed by the Census Bureau, among ethnic groups in this country, 62 percent of Indian Americans have an advanced degree. So, far from being a deprived group, they contribute actively to the economy of the U.S.

India herself possesses the world's second largest pool of scientific manpower, second only to the U.S. This is attributed to the rich culture of India in which science and mathematics have always been perceived as noble intellectual pursuits.

Ancient India produced scientists and mathematicians of note like Aryabhata (c. 476-550). He is one of the first known to have used algebra and trigonometry, and this at a time when mathematics in the Western world was at a comparatively rudimentary stage.

As to developments in other areas, India's ancient science of traditional medicine, Ayurveda, along with Yoga, is now being appreciated in this country and indeed much of Europe, as the original healthy method of staying fit and aging slowly. Herbal shampoos and other cosmetics have made a great impact on the Western world in recent times. Not too many people here are aware that these have been used in India and much of Asia for centuries.

Cars and airplanes are commonly used modes of transport, along with an excellent system of railways and buses linking the whole country at rates accessible to the common person. Education is given pride a place in the average Indian home and you will find people there who speak not merely English, but a number of other languages, too.

Officially, India has 16 prominent languages, but in reality it has many more. Also, these are separate, individual languages with scripts of their own, and not mere dialects. As such, the average Indian speaks at least three languages: English, Hindi and the language of his or her

Coming to the status of women: On the one hand they do have a lot of problems, for much of the country is patriarchal, with daughters being given less importance than

But female infanticide and dowry deaths are nowhere as common and widespread as the Western media make them out to be. It is as ridiculous as claiming that all Americans are polygamous, merely because one sect, the Mormons, used to follow this practice some years ago.

Further, it might interest people here to know that women in India are not denied equal pay, as is the case, unfortunately, in this part of the world. There are many women in the fields of medicine, science and technology, and they receive the same salary as their male counterparts, as was insisted upon by the nation's founders when India won her independence from Great Britain in 1947.

Indian women participated as actively as the men in the freedom struggle of the earlier part of this century, so women there did not have to fight for the vote. It was granted to them as a fundamental right, along with the men, which possibly accounts for the fact that a woman president or prime minister is no big deal there.

One of India's toughest leaders was the then-Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, known as "the Iron lady of India." In fact, to many Indians, God is not necessarily male. They view the supreme power as having both male and female attributes, and address God also as "the Universal Mother," the fountain of all knowledge and com-

Indians are great cinema buffs, from Kurosawa and the international masters to Steven Spielberg and the Hollywood brat pack. Not surprising perhaps, for India possesses the world's largest film industry too, with centers in both Bombay and Madras.

Here films in a wide variety of languages are made, many of which are exported to other countries. Indian films are very popular in the Middle East and in the Republics of the former Soviet Union.

As for the Indian press, it is famous for its exposes of government negligence and corruption. Papers are published in English as well as a number of other languages and the people are avid consumers of news.

Oh yes - for those of you intrepid travelers who still have the guts to travel to this distant country, you can find hamburgers and Coke in restaurants everywhere, for not all Indians are vegetarians, although the majority of the country is vegetarian.

And you will always find a number of people who will want to talk to you and find out more about you and your

Many young Indians love rock music, and rock and pop groups have a wide following there as well. So when you go there, don't forget your guitar.

Indians belong to varied ethnic and religious backgrounds, much like the U.S. That makes for the fascinating variety in its culture that the country is so proud of. In fact, in a way this accounts for the amazing contradictions that coexist in Indian society, making it both a very traditional society and a very modern and progressive Heiman came to believe a marriage would not last and wanted to do the right thing.

Heiman attended oral arguments, but would not speak with reporters.

Parrish did not attend, and a call to her family's Wichita home was not returned.

The legal question for the justices is whether an engagement ring is so special that it should be treated differently than other property, such as a gift of a neck-

The case was scheduled for trial in Sedgwick County District Court, but Judge Timothy Lahey ruled that an engagement ring is a gift given on the condition that the giver and the recipient marry.

Therefore, the judge said, when an engagement is broken, the ring automatically goes back to the giver.

Moore wants the Supreme Court at least to send the case back to district court for a trial to determine whether Heiman deserves to get the ring back. He also suggested that the court could simply declare an engagement ring to be the same as any other gift - meaning Parrish could keep it.

But, Davis asked, "Isn't it universally, practically a custom that a ring is always exchanged? Isn't this kind of a promise of marriage?

Slow news week in sports world produces many random thoughts

The other day while shopping for a new car, random smatterings from the sports world filled my head.

Aside from the fact you should not buy a Ford Tempo, a few things stood out to me. No, I am kidding. This did not really happen. It is just a slow week in the sports world. • The Cubs - some members of the Collegian staff, I will not name names here, wish to continually rub in the fact Chicago

All I can say is - it can only get better. After all, Shane, when the Cubs hop-scotched over the previous National League record holders for worst season they start, hopscotched none over other than your favorite team, the Atlanta Braves. It can only get better, pal.

And, by the way, you do not have to ask me every day how the Cubs are doing. I think we both know the answer.

• Tiger Woods mania - "I'm Tiger Woods, you're Tiger Woods, we're all Tiger Woods." Don't we all feel soooo much bet-

• The 1997 Masters - never before has the stomping of the divots been so entertaining. Too bad the ultimate prize in the ultimate game of golf is a green polyester coat.

I am sure this is drenched in some sort of sappy tradition or something, but it make me think the winner looks like one great big · Shaq as a rapper, Shaq as an actor, Shaq as a commercial pitch man. Whatever happened to Shaq the basketball player?

Note: This fun little game can work with about every high profile athlete. Try Michael Jordan — he works, so does Dennis Rodman, etc.

• Ball girls - I am just curious what these girls are good for. Are they there because baseball has a complex about not having cheerleaders?

Well, if they are supposed to be cheerleaders do not give them gloves. They can be very dangerous. Did you see the one a while back who tossed a fair ball into the stands because she thought it was foul? Please step away from the ball, ma'am. 1 guess Hooters was not hiring that week.

• Little League — it is as American as apple pie, right? Wrong. In the last 10 years, the U.S. has captured the championship a whopping three times.

Gotta hand it to those boys from the Far East. They may look like they are 20, but I assure you they are not.

• The Cubs - did I mentioned Harry Carey's bar in Chicago is serving 45 cent beer (regularly $2.25) until the Cubs win a game? At this rate, Chicago will dry up faster than Harry Carey.

· Baseball in Chicago — is it a Windy City jinx, or what? I guess Chi-Town is not big enough for more than one decent pro sports team. As long as Michael Jordan is around, the Bulls will reign supreme.

• Neil Smith — he is gone for good. And to the Broncos of all places. I guess it goes to show you money can buy loyalty. Apparently the Chiefs were not paying him enough to keep a stockpile of those nose strips on hand.

Only time will tell if this was a good move. I guess we will find out August 31 when the Chiefs travel to Denver for their • NASCAR Racing - believe it or not, this is classified as a sport (by some stretch of the imagination, people seem to like it).

It seems odd to me that if I want to drive really fast in circles in the K-State Student Union parking lot, for some reason that is not OK. I guess it is just a double standard or something.

For the amusement of all, we should stick really loathsome people in those cars and let them duel it out to the finish. First up: Albert Belle vs. Roberto Alomar. Now that would be entertainment. • The Cubs — they are on pace to set baseball's all-time record for worst season start at 21 losses. Personally, I do not see this as happening, but if by some slim chance it does, mark my words: The Cubs' season will be featured more on ESPN than the World Series Champs. It does not matter how bad they get, they are still more famous than Ted Turner's boys will ever be.

Seiler's throw broke the old Kansas Relays mark of 182' 3" set by Katie Panek of Wichita State last year.

Anna Whitham came in fourth in the event and Kirsten Schultz threw 158'11", which was good enough for seventh place.

Rovelto said he was not a bit surprised with the success of the throwers in the outdoor season. "Renetta and Anna came off an outstanding ust two months ago, senior Nikki Lagerstrom thought her collegiate tennis career was over.

Today, she is practicing and preparing for Saturday's home match against Texas A&M, at 10 a.m. at the L.P. Washburn Tennis Complex.

It all started for Lagerstrom last Christmas Day. Lagerstrom woke up with what she thought was a sore ring After a couple of weeks, the pain continually got worse. Finally, Lagerstrom decided to go see a doctor in her hometown, Olathe.

After an MRI test, doctors said Lagerstrom had a minor bulge in her disc.

The problem caused Lagerstrom to be numb from the knee down. The doctor said that the next step was surgery to repair the disc.

Lagerstrom was told there was a chance she would miss the spring season.

The news was bad, but was worse when one considers what happened to Lagerstrom last season.

In just the fourth Big 8 match of the season against Colorado, Lagerstrom suffered a broken foot that ended her season. Lagerstrom had to sit on the sidelines and watch as her team made it to the NCAA Tournament for "I couldn't understand why this was happening to me again," she said. "I had worked so hard in the offseason. I was working every day to get in great shape. I just kept asking myself why was this happening to me." To make matters even worse, Lagerstrom had to watch arch-rival Kansas beat K-State in that second round of the tournament.

"That made it even worse. I hate KU," Lagerstrom said. "I've always wanted to beat them, and we really had a chance to beat them that time. We were playing

As Lagerstrom was preparing for surgery, the doctors came back with one hopeful piece of information.

After getting some initial tests back, a back specialist said there was no bulging disc in Lagerstrom's back. Rather, it was a viral infection that was causing the problems. The infection had come into the nerve cavity, causing swelling of the nerve.

Not only was there no need to operate, but doctors cleared Lagerstrom to play when she was able to do so. "I still had no feeling in my leg and no strength in my foot," Lagerstrom said. "I went out to hit, but I just Lagerstrom spent the next couple of weeks trying to strengthen her leg. She spent an hour each day doing a variety of leg exercises. Match by match, Lagerstrom's strength and stamina has increasingly improved. This past Tuesday, Lagerstrom lost in a close three-set match against Not being able to play at 100 percent has been frustrating for Lagerstrom this season. Head coach Steve Bietau said Lagerstrom's expectations have resulted in "Her expectations were so high coming off of the injury," Bietau said. "If you look at a year ago, she was playing extremely well. I think she was maybe trying to get back at the level real soon."

But as frustrating as it is, Lagerstrom says in the same breath how thankful she is for the opportunity. "I am just so happy to get out there and compete," Lagerstrom said. "My dad keeps reminding me how much of a blessing it is that I am out there. He's right. A month ago I didn't think I would be out there at all." As the lone senior on the team, Bietau said Lagerstrom's attitude has been a model for all.

"She's been tremendous. She sets the standard for determination," he said. "She never refuses to quit or give up. She should really feel proud and satisfied about what she has been able to do."

Cats prepare for toughest series of season against Tech

Just when the Wildcats thought their luck couldn't get any worse, it did. Texas Tech, the No.1 team in the country, will come to town this weekend in what shapes up to be a must-win series for the Cats K-State is 5-13 in the Big 12 conference, which is ninth in the standings. Only the top six teams in the Big 12 at the end of the season are allowed to participate in the With only 12 games left in Big 12 play, the Wildcats trail the sixth place team, Kansas, by five games. K-State lost to the Jayhawks Tuesday night 5-4 in a non-conference match.

If the Cats are going to make a last charge to qualify, it starts this weekend with the Red Raiders. 'We're going in thinking of taking two out of three," Scott Poepard, senior outfielder, said. "Possibly sweep, but at least two. We're not going to change anything, we've been playing good," he said. We just haven't been

Second baseman Todd Fereday reiterated Poepard's

"If we go out and do what we're supposed to, then we'll win," he said. "We're not going to put pressure on ourselves to win, but we're going to go out and play as well as we should."

The K-State offense ranks fifth in the Big 12 rankings with a .323 team batting average, scoring on average nearly 11 runs a contest.

"We're not going to change our game plan," Fereday said. "We'll try to be a bit more selective, but still hit for At 34-5, Texas Tech has been to and played at some of the best stadiums in the Midwest. This weekend they come into Frank Myers Field, which might be an edge, according to Fereday "They've played on artificial turf most of the season," Fereday said. "For anyone coming to Frank Myers and this field, you can get some crazy hops. It might be to our The starters listed for this weekend are Jason Wells (4-1, 4.83) tonight at 7, Eric Yanz (4-1, 7.71) at 2 p.m.

Saturday and Jon Oiseth (1-1, 6.00) at 1 p.m. Sunday After this weekend the Cats travel to Baylor, Iowa State and then venture to Lawrence to play the Jayhawks. With all of those teams at or near the Wildcats' half of the division, K-State needs to prove it can win against a top-ranked opponent, like Texas Tech, if they are going to advance to the College World Series.

"Right now we're concentrating on Texas Tech, but it's in the back of everybody's minds," said Fereday. "We know what we have to do to win. We just gotta keep playing good and not give up."

Other baseball news involves Wildcat career and single season records that may be improved or broken.

Poepard is tied for the Wildcat career lead in home runs with 30. His total of 56 doubles is two away from being the all-time leader in that category as well.

Yanz looks to improve his career innings pitched record of 259.0 this weekend. His 196 career strikeouts rank third in K-State history, 23 behind the leader, Andy

Netanyahu: Settlers aren't going anywhere

JERUSALEM - Defiant in the face of an influence-peddling scandal, Benjamin Netanyahu vowed Thursday to hang tough through calls for his resignation. "We're not going anywhere," he told supporters.

The government, and efforts to revive the peace process, have virtually stopped while Israelis wait to find out whether prosecutors will follow police advice and charge the prime minister with fraud and breach of trust.

The police recommendation that Netanyahu and three key allies be charged in the scandal has fueled speculation about - and calls for - an early end to his stormy 10-month reign. Prosecutors' decision was expected by Sunday.

At his Likud Party's headquarters in Tel Aviv, Netanyahu suggested his government was under a politically motivated attack for its policies to keep Jewish settlements in the West Bank and all of Jerusalem under Israeli rule. He told his supporters that the truth will be victorious.

'We are not going anywhere," Netanyahu said. "We are staying in the place where the people and history put us, and we will continue to lead this people."

The scandal stems from Netanyahu's decision in January to appoint Jerusalem lawyer Roni Bar-On as attorney general. Bar-On resigned after a day in office amid a storm of criticism that he was unqualified.

Days later, Israel television alleged that the appointment was part of a conspiracy by senior officials who expected Bar-On to end the corruption trial of Aryeh Deri, head of the Shas religious party. Deri was to ensure in return that the Shas' two Cabinet ministers gave Netanyahu the majority needed to approve the Israeli troop pullback from most of the West Bank town of Hebron.

Netanyahu denied the allegations and called for the inquiry. After a 12week investigation, police handed in their 995-page report Tuesday.

In addition to recommending that Netanyahu be indicted, they advised that Deri be charged with blackmail and that Netanyahu's aide, Avigdor Lieberman, and Justice Minister Tsachi Hanegbi be charged with breach of trust. Lieberman allegedly relayed Deri's threats to Netanyahu and Hanegbi is accused of misleading the Cabinet about Bar-On's

The crisis has overshadowed the latest mission by U.S. mediator Dennis Ross, who has met with Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to try to revive the disintegrating peace process.

An Israeli official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said little progress was expected until prosecutors make a decision.

Arafat - whose relationship with Netanyahu often has been antagonistic reportedly was receiving half-hour updates on the crisis.

The development nipped budding efforts to establish a Likud-Labor coalition that would be more free than Netanyahu's current right-wing coalition government to make concessions to the COLUMBIA, S.C. - One of the nation's richest personal-injury lawyers was indicted Thursday on ambulancechasing charges, accused of hiring "accident runners" to recruit clients after a deadly airline crash.

John M. O'Quinn, who earned an estimated $40 million from breast implant cases, was charged along with three other Houston lawyers with illegally soliciting clients after the 1994 crash of USAir Flight 1016 near Charlotte, N.C.

"I have done nothing wrong, and I am innocent of these charges,"said O'Quinn, who represents the families of five victims from the crash. "Not one client has complained about me. Nobody I represent in the USAir case

Dole loans Gingrich $300,000

► ETHICAL QUESTIONS RAISED as Dole aids former colleague, invests in party's future.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The deal, one of the more unusual financial arrangements in political history, was sealed at a private meeting between Newt Gingrich and Bob Dole on the speaker's Capitol balcony, a perch with a sweeping view of the nation's Mall and monuments.

At that moment Tuesday evening, Dole, the Republican party elder statesman and 1996 presidential nominee, became Gingrich's personal banker.

many members of Congress when it was announced Thursday.

But associates and friends of the Kansas Republican suggested it was just another manifestation of Dole's magnanimity, a trait that did not always come across in his failed presidential race.

"Dole just came up with it himself. I think this is a brilliant solution to a difficult problem," said Charles Black, a longtime GOP consultant and 1996 campaign adviser to Dole.

Some Democrats suggested the loan itself raised ethical questions, coming from a new member of a lobbying firm whose clients include NBC, the National Football League and energy and transportation companies. Dole has said he will do no lobbying with the firm, which will pay him at least $600,000 a year. Although never particularly close to Gingrich, Dole deeply appreciated the House speaker's support for his 1996 presidential bid and decided to reciprocate with a helping financial hand, said Republicans close to

Furthermore, the longtime former Senate leader was weary of hearing about Gingrich's financial plight, and the divisive agonizing over how to pay his penalty for ethics misdeeds.

"I consider this not only an opportunity to support a friend but a long-term investment in the future of our party," Dole said Thursday as details of the eight-year, 10-percent loan were announced.

Dole had humble origins but has assets with his wife, Elizabeth, of about $4 million. He starts work next week with the law and lobbying firm of Verner Liipfert Bernhard ENERGY, III. - Four months ago, a 14-year-old girl disappeared from her New York home after striking up a friendship with a Nebraska airman whom she met in an Internet chat room.

They left a scattered trail in Missouri and Nebraska, and police received hundreds of tips on their whereabouts. But nothing panned out until Wednesday, when a tip generated by the syndicated "Maury Povich Show" led police to the pair in southern Illinois.

Senior Airman Brooker Maltais, 22, was arrested in Energy and is wanted by the Air Force on charges of desertion, said Maj. Cynthia Colin, chief public affairs officer at Offutt Air Force Base near Omaha, Neb., where Maltais was stationed.

He also is wanted on a federal warrant, but authorities would not disclose details.

The girl, who is from Brighton, N.Y., near Rochester, was found a short time later at the apartment they shared in nearby Marion, said Kevin O'Connell, her uncle.

Police would not release any details on where the girl was found or if she had been harmed. Her sister, Tracey O'Connell-Jay, of Seal Beach, Calif., told Omaha TV station KPTM she spoke with her briefly.

"She sounded in shock," O'Connell-Jay said. "She didn't sound real good to me."

The girl, whose family has described her as an honor student who didn't date, was reported missing Dec. 19 after her mother dropped her off at a shopping mall.

Unorthodox rhythms put El Fontain's new release in the company of those not bound to four-four time arley's Pig," the first album from local band El Fontain, hit local stores April 5. Recorded over a year ago, the album offers 12 tracks featuring a combination of distorted guitar riffs over progressive, surging rhythms.

John Evans, lead guitarist, said, "I'd classify our music as an anal jazz-rock fusion. It's more of a musician's music rather than music intended to sell a million records."

Although the sound is somewhat heavy, the overall feel is not that of a typical hard rock ound. Most of the tracks have a mellowed out

Fontain's songs combine hard rock with jazz and some blues. This combination makes a lot of the songs' structures follow an unpredictable jazz format. The sound produced in "Marley's Pig" tends to be a bit redundant. This is because of the constant musical style through all 12 tracks. Although the style is unchanging, little additions like harmonies and an acoustic guitar tend to liven up certain songs.

One such song is track eight, "Copenhagen Dazs." On this track the acoustic guitar seems to float over a bright, bouncing rhythm. To make the sound that much more appealing, Lee provides tight harmonies parallel to Robertson's Wes Schnelle, junior in business management, and Mark Threeton, an employee for the Manhattan school district, have signed up for the program. They will spend the last week of July traveling across lower Wisconsin.

"We start at the Mississippi River and end at Lake Michigan. We dip our tires into both bodies of water in order to say that we covered coast to coast of Wisconsin," Threeton said.

Each year about 50 to 90 people participate in the program. They ride 60 to 70 miles per day.

We ride about 30 to 35 miles before lunch, and 30 to 35 more miles in the afternoon. We usually stop for the day about 4:30 and spend the night at a local church," Threeton said.

This will be Threeton's third year to go on

"I go because it is a challenge for myself. I get to push myself and see how much I can get out of myself. It's an adventure," Threeton said.

This will be Schnelle's first year to go on the trip, and he said he is looking forward to seeing the sights of northern United States.

"The main reason I decided to go was for something different to do this summer and to just get away. I also wanted to see the sights. Mark is a native Chicagoan, so we are going to spend a few days in Chicago. I have always wanted to see Chicago. We are planning to go to the Excalibur and see if we can see Rodman," Schnelle said.

One day of the trip is set aside for advanced cyclists to ride 100 miles in a day. Both Schnelle and Threeton plan to take the 100-mile path.

"It's a thing among people who ride to break 100 miles a day. It's just a personal goal for me. It's something I have to try," Schnelle said.

Schnelle has been riding bikes avidly for the past six months.

"I ride for exercise, mainly to be outdoors," Schnelle said.

Schnelle and Threeton have been training for the bike trip a little each day.

"I usually ride about five miles a day around town. I also run and lift weights at the Rec. I started running a mile a day, now I'm running a mile and a half," Schnelle said. Threeton rides about 15 miles a day at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

This summer they plan to start riding 20 to 30 miles a day to condition themselves for the trip. "I think if we can work our way up to 20 or 30 miles a day we will be fine for the bike trip. It really isn't that hard once you get into the motion," Threeton said.

The trip is sponsored by Evangelical Free Churches and has been in operation for six years.

poor smokers. A settlement would give companies blanket protection from smoking-related lawsuits. In return, the companies would pay billions into a compensation fund and agree to cut back on advertis-Public health officials and the states see the talks as a breakthrough. Others see them as a smokescreen for avoiding the terrible costs of their product.

Giving companies immunity from lawsuits would violate the due process rights of thousands of people, Miami attorney Stanley Rosenblatt said.

"That has always been the goal of the tobacco industry, and that would be a disaster for the American people," said Rosenblatt, who represents thousands in smoker class-action suits. "It's a good business deal for them and a lousy deal for the American people."

The settlement reportedly could cost as much as $300 billion during 25 years and require the industry to restrict its advertising, including the end of characters like Joe Camel and the Marlboro

A sticking point is whether the FDA would get the right to regulate the nicotine levels in cigarettes, making them less addictive, two sources close to the talks told the Associated Press.

In New York Stock Exchange trading, Philip Morris stock, which shot up almost 11 percent Wednesday, gave up some of its gains this morning, dipping 50 cents to $42.75. RJR Nabisco, which rose more than 10 percent Wednesday, added to its gains this morning, rising 37-1/2 cents to $33.87-1/2.

Representatives from Philip Morris, RJR Nabisco, Lorillard and Brown & Williamson met at undisclosed locations with attorneys general from Minnesota, Florida, Connecticut, Mississippi, Washington, Massachusetts, Wisconsin and Arizona. The White House monitored the talks, which ended for the week on Wednesday.

Judges look down on smoking in some custody decisions

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. - If you can imagine yourself in a battle for custody of your children, divorce lawyer Alan Scheinkman has some advice: Don't smoke.

Judges in divorce cases are increasingly considering smoking as a factor in deciding where to put the kids — especially when the children have asthma or allergies.

"If you were a prudent parent on the receiving end of a custody petition, and you really cared about the kids and retaining custody, you'd say, 'I'm quitting," Scheinkman says.

The issue has spilled over into the nation's family courts as the public becomes increasingly aware of the dangers of cigarettes and secondhand smoke. It will be the topic of a panel discussion Friday at Pace University Law School. The nearly universal best-interests-of-the-child standard used in custody cases means parties can raise, and judges can consider, almost any issue. And if a judge is so inclined, he can see smoking as a negative in two ways: dirtying the child's air and showing poor character.

"The parent who's willing to smoke in the same room with an asthmatic child shows more self-centeredness and less selfless regard for their child than one who won't," says Ann Oldfather, a divorce lawyer in Louisville, Ky.

Smoking is not always going to make a difference. "If you had a parent who is beating the other parent and the child, you wouldn't say, 'Well, because the victim is a smoker, we're going to award custody to the abusing parent," Scheinkman says. But in cases where the parents are equal in nearly all other respects, smoking could prove to be the decisive factor.

In 1990, a Tennessee court awarded custody of an asthmatic boy to his father because his mother smoked in front of the child, even in an automobile. Similar rulings have come in other states since 1993.

Some judges, perhaps realizing that it can be hard to quit smoking, have decided not to switch custody but to impose smoking restrictions on the parent. In Nassau County, a judge ruled that a woman could smoke in only one room of the house, and only if the children weren't present.

In Knox County, Tenn., the Circuit Court has adopted a rule for all custody cases, and not just those in which the child has a health problem: "If children are exposed to smoke, it will be strong evidence that the exposing parent does not take good

That rule led last year to a criminal contempt conviction - and a loss of all visitation rights - for a father who smoked during his time with his daughter. Merril Sobie, a Pace Law professor, a specialist in children's law and a pipe smoker, believes that without evidence a child is being harmed, "I don't think smoking should be relevant at all."

"Should we deny custody if the parent feeds the child junk food? A parent that lets Johnny play touch football?" he asks. "I'm also very leery of the state intervening in parental discretion.

Search for former K-State student ends

▶ More info? Zeta Phi Beta will sponsor a memorial service for Michelle Bennett May 11 at All Faiths Chapel. The time has yet to be announced.

▶ New York police discover Bennett's body in East River Friday.

NICOLE KIRBY

After an extensive search for former K-State student Michelle Bennett, who disappeared on March 8 from White Plains, N.Y., her body was found in the East River.

Friday afternoon, a fisherman located the body of the former member of Student Senate, Black Student Union, Human Ecology Club, National Organization of Minority Architecture Students and Zeta Phi Beta sorority, who had transferred in June to the Parsons School of Design in New York.

Police did not know the cause of death because there were no visible signs of trauma on her body. Bennett was the second New York college student to be missing and found dead in the past few months.

White Plains police had been working with the New York police department to search everywhere, including hospitals, medical examiner's offices, her apartment building and even K-State.

They had theorized that she might have come to visit her friends in Manhattan, although friends and family didn't believe she would do such a thing without telling anyone.

One member of Zeta Phi Beta, Rhonda Lee, said Bennett's disappearance had been hard on many of her friends and relatives.

"I know she'll be missed by many, and it's good to have some element of closure," Lee said. Wondering was taking its toll on a lot of people."

Lee said Zeta Phi Beta would have a memorial service for Bennett.

ions and tigers and otters, oh my! Otters?

The newly renovated otter exhibit at the Sunset Zoological Park took center stage as the zoo celebrated Earth Day on Saturday.

Otter Encounter, which houses the zoo's two otters, was renovated to make it more attractive and enjoyable for not only the otters, but the public as well.

"The otters have always been real popular," Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director, said. "This is a good opportunity for people to view the otters."

The renovations included landscaping and a glass viewing panel and were funded by a $2,500 donation by the Pilot Club of Manhattan. Shirley Hemme, president of the club, said it raises funds for numerous projects and felt the otter exhibit was worthwhile.

"We try to support projects that would be most beneficial," Hemme

"Children visit here, and it's a benefit for the youth and the community itself."

While the zoo makes renovations periodically, this is the first Scott Shoemaker, director of the zoo for more than a year, has been a part of from start to finish.

Shoemaker said the otter exhibit BLAKE FOSTER, 6, and Amanda Puhr, 7, watch one of the otters roaming the could not have been done without the commitment from the zoo's staff and said most of the progress on the zoo could not be done without the help from numerous volunteers and local donors, as well as K-State. "I'm looking for every connection to K-State I can. They provide us with some phenomenal opportunities and we provide them something a lot of colleges don't have - a range of exotic animals," he said.

One of the main focuses of the zoo is to educate. Earth Day, with more than 1,500 in attendance, allowed them a chance to do this.

"The more people we get in here, the more people we educate,"

Shoemaker said. Also a part of the Earth Day celebration was the human service program, which placed various booths throughout the zoo. Booths included the Kansas State. Kids

Earth Day at the Sunset Zoological Park served as the end of the Cans for Conservation

The program, which the zoo has sponsored for four years, provided education about reefs and rain forests to seven schools, including two Manhattan elementary schools.

Schaneé Anderson, education curator, said the program was designed to make children aware of the environment and how they can help it.

With the program, schools were supplied educational material to teach students about reefs and rain forests. Staff from the zoo then came to the schools to give presentations.

The program, which was opened to any school wanting to participate, also consisted of asking each child to collect one pound of aluminum cans to be recycled. The money for the cans is helping to fund the chimpanzee exhibit, which is scheduled to open in August. About purpose is to teach the kids about recycling. "We want to make recycling to be a habit, not a hobby," she said.

$1,000 was raised, but Anderson said the real

Anderson said the program uses a lot of zoo resources, including money and staff time, but the rewards are worth it.

"It takes a lot of time, but we feel it's important enough to invest in the future of this program," she said.

Canty, Lockett snag spots in NFL draft

SHANE MCCORMICK

The dream of making it to the professional football field became a reality this weekend for former K-State players Chris Canty and Kevin Lockett.

Canty, a two-time all-American, became the first Wildcat since defensive back Clarence Scott in 1971 to be selected in the first round of the NFL draft. With the 29th overall pick, the AFC champion New England Patriots selected Canty as their first pick.

"I'm coming to a team that has really established themselves," Canty said. "They are probably one step away from going to the Super Bowl. Hopefully I'll be that next step.

Earlier in the year when he announced he was leaving school early, Canty had been told he would probably be a top-15 pick. His arrest for a DUI last fall raised character questions in many scouts' eyes, which lowered Canty's stock. "I made a mistake," Canty said of his DUI arrest. "I definitely learned from that mistake, and I'm just trying to put it behind me."

While nobody doubted his athleticism and big-play potential, some were weary of his attitude. Pro Football Weekly called Canty "too cocky for his own good" and said he "spends too much time acting cool and trying to be the next Deion Sanders.'

New England head coach Pete Carroll described Canty as "having a little bit of a swagger about him, which is a plus as long as it doesn't go overboard."

The Patriots made the cornerback position a priority in this year's draft. The Patriots were coming off a season in which they ranked 19th in the NFL in total defense, allowing nearly 240 yards a game through the air. Patriot cornerbacks Otis Smith and Jimmy Hitchcock recorded only two interceptions each last

With his success in college, the Patriots could also use Canty's abilities on punt returns. Last season, the Patriots only averaged 11.3 yards on punt returns.

"I know what I am capable of. When I get into mini-camp, I'll start proving that," Canty said. K-State fans won't have to travel far to see Lockett play in the NFL. In the second round, the 47th pick overall, the Kansas City Chiefs used their pick to draft

"I would probably have to say that this is where I really wanted to go," Lockett said from his parent's home in Tulsa, Okla. "I will still be able to be close to K-State and follow the success of my brother Aaron." Coming into the draft, Lockett was listed by many publications as the fifth- or sixth-best wide receiver in the draft. The couple of knocks against Lockett were his size and speed.

Lockett said his personal workouts helped erase some of the scouts' doubts.

"I think those workouts really did help me," Lockett said. "People were worried about my size and speed. I couldn't really do anything about my size, but I was able to answer some doubts about speed with a 4.38 time in the 40. That really helped my status out."

Lockett watched as the first five wide receivers were taken ahead of him. Florida's Ike Hilliard was the first taken with the seventh overall pick by the New York Giants.

The next was Miami's Yatil Green at No. 15 by the Miami Dolphins, followed by Tampa Bay's selection of Reidel Anthony at No. 16 and fellow Big 12 receiver Rae Carruth at No. 27 to Carolina. Tennessee's Joey Kent was the fifth receiver taken with the 46th pick by the Houston Oilers.

Last week, the conservation group American Rivers declared the Missouri the nation's most endangered river, saying it is failing to reach its full potential for recreation, wildlife and other uses.

Shackled by levees and dams, hampered by agricultural interests and the continued support of commercial barge navigation, the river is a shadow of its former self, the group said.

SERVICES FOR SEDGWICK COUNTY DEPUTY TO BE THIS WEEK.

WICHITA - Services will be this week for a veteran sheriff's deputy who was fatally stabbed with a kitchen knife while trying to make an arrest in a domestic disturbance

Sgt. Kenneth E. Snider, 48, was stabbed in the shoulder early Friday at a home to which officers had often been called in the Oaklawn neighborhood just outside Wichita. He died about an hour later during surgery.

No one besides the 20-year veteran of the Sedawick County Sheriff's Department was hurt in the disturbance. Three other deputies took a 23-year-old resident of the house into custody.

The suspect was held Friday as District Attorney Nola Foulston considered charges. In Kansas, killing a law enforcement official can bring a charge of capital murder.

Sedgwick County Sheriff Mike Hill would not release details of the original disturbance or information about the people who were at the house.

The cause of death was a stab wound to the right shoulder, neck and chest, county coroner Dr. Corrie May ruled Friday afternoon.

Fraternity, sorority raise money for hunger relief through fasting

SARA EDWARDS

Two local greek houses put themselves in the shoes of the people they were helping this weekend.

Beta Theta Pi fraternity and Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority went without food for 30 hours to raise money for the fight against hunger. They have raised about $1,300 so far, and they are still accepting donations.

The houses took part in the 30 Hour Famine, an annual international program sponsored by World Vision. World Vision is a relief and development organization.

Ed O'Malley, Beta member and 30 Hour Famine organizer, saw a commercial about World Vision on television and sent away for information. After sharing the information with his house, the members decided to participate and invited the Kappas to participate with them.

"We thought this would be a great way to do it. We wanted to get involved," Chris Althoff, Beta vice president, external, said.

The Betas and Kappas asked businesses, the community and greek houses to sponsor them while they went without food. They started their fundraising efforts by collecting money in the K-State Student Union last week. Althoff said they had tremendous support from the community, especially other greek houses.

"The greek support was just awesome. I would have never expected that at all," he said.

The group went without food between noon Saturday and 6 p.m. Sunday. They could only drink water or juice.

To pass the time, they watched videos, had a scavenger hunt, a water balloon fight and played hide-and-go-seek. They also had a car wash that raised about $250.

"We did a lot of things to keep our mind off the lack of food," O'Malley said.

Many of the participants said the hunger pangs

Many of the participants said the hunger pangs weren't that bad because they kept busy.

They said all the activities made it fun.

"It hits hardest around times you would normally eat, but it goes away about 30 minutes later," Kristin Bloss, sophomore in apparel and textile marketing, said.

Kye Hittle, junior in electrical engineering, said he took the hunger problem for granted.

"It lasted a long time, but it really made me realize what it feels like to be hungry. I never considered it before," he said.

Many people said the experience made hunger more realistic to them.

"It's one thing just to raise the money, but another to not eat and put yourself in their shoes," Beth Phillips, junior in marketing, said.

Police investigate possibility of serial rapist

Be careful. The editorial board encourages students not to let the small-town atmosphere of Manhattan prevent them from being

LINCOLN, Neb. — A serial rapist who attacks women working and studying late on college campuses might be on the loose in the Midwest, according to investigators and court documents.

Five campus rapes in at least three states in the past two months, including two in Nebraska, share striking similarities, the Lincoln Journal Star reported Saturday.

Investigators in Lincoln linked the cases in court documents filed as part of a request to get blood, saliva, hair and voice samples from a suspect, who has since been cleared.

DNA evidence provides a solid link between a Nebraska and Iowa assault, Lincoln investigator Jeff Howard said. The other state involved in the investigation is Wisconsin. Investigators also suspect two attacks in Illinois might be connected.

The first attack occurred at Union College in Lincoln on Feb. 6, when a man wearing a ski mask assaulted a woman who was playing the piano in the basement of an administrative building during the evening hours.

The second occurred on Feb. 10 when a 19-year-old woman at Carthage College in Kenosha, Wis., was attacked as she was playing the piano and singing in a music practice room.

On Feb. 16, a 24-year-old woman was attacked while she worked alone in a computer lab at St. Ambrose University, a small religious college in Davenport, Iowa.

In the Lincoln, Kenosha and Davenport attacks, the assailant forced the victims to lie on their stomachs, demanded money, questioned their sexual history and asked them to pray for him, according to court documents filed in Lancaster County District Court.

On March 5, a 30-year-old instructor on the campus of the University of Nebraska at Omaha was assaulted in a computer laboratory while the woman was logged onto the Intern

Howard said a DNA report provided a solid link between the UNO assault and the Davenport attack.

Kenosha police investigator Kristine Block, whose work helped uncover the similarities of the assaults, has described the suspect as a muscular black male in his early 20s, with short hair. He has been seen twice wearing a black jogging suit with a backpack, the newspaper reported.

Block told the Kenosha News in Saturday's newspaper that two assaults in Illinois also fit the campus-rape pattern:

· A woman at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., was assaulted Feb. 9.

 Just four hours before the Davenport rape, a man attempted to sexually assault a student at Augustana College in nearby Rock Island, Ill., just across the Mississippi River.

Experts at the FBI's National Academy in Quantico, Va., are helping to coordinate the four-state investigation.

With summer quickly approaching, a job after graduation or an internship to provide experience still may be needed. But what do recruiters want? What are they looking for when interviewing?

A team effort between Career and Employment services and Greek Affairs hopes to answer these questions and many more with a panel discussion at 6 p.m. Tuesday, April 22, in the K-State Student Union Little Theatre.

The panel consists of business representatives from different areas of industry, Joleen Marek, Career and Employment Services graduate assistant, said.

Jim Davie of Farm Bureau Mutual Insurance, Brad Barackman at Enterprise Rent-a-car, Dave Dreiling from It's Greek to Me and Mary Paul from the Valley Center School District will be serving as panel members.

"The panel plans to discuss interview strategies and provide insight on what recruiters are looking for in students," Marek said. "We are hoping this will answer students' questions."

Following the discussion, Career and Employment Services staff will be present with materials about services located in Holtz Hall. Further questions are welcomed at that time as well.

Wanting to reach the fraternities and sororities more, Career and Employment Services joined Greek Affairs in planning the panel, Marek

Even though this is planned by Greek Affairs, all students on campus are invited to participate in Tuesday's panel.

The panel discussion is part of Greek Affairs' Greek 399 educational programming series for juniors and seniors, but the panel is not limited to just juniors and seniors.

Currently, approximately 75 people are expected at the panel, Marek said. If it is a success, plans will be made to continue the discussion in the future.

Did you ever wonder how, in the five-minute walk from your advisor's office to Willard Hall, your classes all magically filled up? Their ways are shrouded in mystery and apparently revolve around the ritual sacrifice of acorns to their lord and master, whose name I could tell you in person, but it's hard to transcribe a series of chattering sounds.

It remains uncertain as to when the squirrel agenda expanded to include their most recent rogue behavior. I've yet to determine how they checked out all the books on Jean Racine's "Phaedre" before my report on said play without a valid K-State ID card. Is anybody out there missing an ID card?

Weaving a common thread to link the apparently unrelated incidents of rodent-related revelry is difficult, but not impossible

Interdepartmental memos, permission-to-enroll slips and homework assignments are fair game for the tree-climbing larcenists. The campus computer has been down several times in recent weeks. (I can't find a way to explain the men's basketball team on the squirrels yet. I'm open to suggestions.)

Word has it a truck of Honey-Nut Clusters cereal got an unexplained flat tire several blocks before arriving at a local supermarket.

• PLANS FOR LARAMIE STREET RAISE CONCERNS

The proposed plan by Manhattan Christian College to close Laramie Street needs some historical perspective.

Way back in 1985, MCC was in deep financial trouble. Apparently with no other options available to them (like raising the money privately) MCC approached the City of Manhattan and asked for a rezoning of its land at 16th Street and Anderson Avenue.

It needed the rezoning, MCC said, because this would allow the college to sell the land to a developer in Colorado, who would then build a strip mall. This sale would supply MCC with the needed cash to fix its financial problems. At that time MCC threatened to move out of the city if its rezoning proposal wasn't

So now we are blessed with the architectural beauty that is Anderson Village.

It is important to note that this rezoning went against the city's own Comprehensive Land Use Plan and that it took MCC several tries to get the planning board to pass it for this and other reasons.

Given this history some questions beg to be asked: What will happen to the land that is now Laramie Street the next time MCC finds itself cash strapped?

Will Manhattan find itself with yet another strip mall or perhaps a multistory parking garage? How does MCC plan to pay for its proposed $13 million folly?

My guess is they will again come to the city asking them to issue bonds or for money from the Economic Development Fund, or both.

This is corporate welfare at its finest, and we will all pay.

I was just hungry.

The day started out stupidly enough, that sunshiny day last week. I woke up to the sound of my loving roommate pounding on my bedroom door, a sure sign that I'd overslept.

"It ain't no big thang," I said to Miranda. "We'll just drive to class today. I'll park in the Ramada, and we'll act real cool, see? Me and you, we'll make like we're staying there at that fine hotel with that fine Gold Fork restaurant." It was the perfect plan.

Never mind the fact that we live a mere mile from campus, a nice, breezy walk. The fact seemed so clear to me in that sleepy fog I was enveloped in: We need to drive or we will be late. Hands would be paddled, noses would be in the cor-

So we pulled ever-so-convincingly into the Ramada Inn parking lot. "Wow. I sure do like it here in ... what's this place called? Manhattan. So many pretty trees," I said loudly.

The perfect crime. Never mind those huge signs posted round the lot. I think I saw the words "tow" and "Ramada guests only." Whatever. Doesn't apply to me.

We skipped merrily along to class, our books swinging from straps behind us. The birds chirped, the breeze blew. T'was a glorious day. As I sat waiting for my first class to start, my friend and cohort, Tara, came into the room.

"Hey, I just saw your car gettin' towed," she said. "Nuh-uh," I said.

"Just kiddin'," she grinned toothily at me.

We had a good laugh, we did. Little did we know the dramatic irony was building. I pranced gaily from class to class that morning, making a mental note here, a mental note there, to go check on Ol' Wanda (my car, of course). But then I'd remind myself of my Oscar-winning "Hotel Guest" performance, and my worries about Ol' Wanda would Once my last class of the day was over, Old Man Hunger started a-gnawin' on my belly.

"Patience, my little friend," I said. "I'll feed you soon." Unfortunately, many obstacles stood between me and my goal — food.

After all of the above were dutifully taken care of, I set out to the Ramada to fetch Ol' Wanda. I had a $5 bill and a $3 Dilly's Deli coupon burning holes in my pock-

I trotted quickly toward the Ramada parking lot. I sped up when I couldn't see Ol' Wanda glistening in the warm spring sunshine.

She's there, I thought to myself. After all, I reasoned, that big truck with the big, obvious K-State parking permit was still smugly parked in the lot. As a defender of the little folk, if it were up to me, the big bad truck would have taken a little trip across town, not a little defenseless car. Guess it's not up to me. Wanda had been towed.

I called Miranda, and Tara and I piled into her car and made a trip to the tow shop, nestled in the Ozarks of Manhattan. I never knew it before, but once you cross over the new bridge, you're entering a whole new country. We found the tow truck place wedged on the other side of the big KS hill. Banjo music wafted down from the hilltops. The sound of moonshine stills whirred in the background. We pulled into the driveway, greeted by at least

Athletes compete, socialize at Special Olympics

SARA EDWARDS

The Special Olympics track meet Saturday not only offered athletes the chance to win a medal or hear their name over the loud speaker, but the chance to socialize with friends and show off their skills.

Tyran Hernandez, Junction City Pace Setters team member, said he was excited about his gold medal in the standing long jump, but disappointed when his name was pronounced wrong over the loudspeaker. He said the meet was a good way to get out, have fun and meet lots of other people

This is the best chance to see what I'm good at in sports and stuff," he said.

Brenda Gray, Twin Lakes Tigers coach, said Special Olympics is a good opportunity for participants to practice social skills and sportsmanship and meet friends. It is also a good way for them to show off that they can do sports, she Debbi DeVenuto, Area 3 director, said the competition allowed the athletes to interact and socialize.

"This is their social life, their way to participate and communicate," she said.

DeVenuto said athletes are awarded medals for the first three places, and others receive ribbons. "Everyone walks away a winner. They get something," she at Bishop Stadium in CiCo Park. There were regular events as well as modified events.

For example, there was a shot put competition, but there also was a softball throw and a tennis ball throw.

Debbie Welch, Marshall/Washington counties team member, said she was nervous because this was her first time competing. She said she had been practicing the long jump.

I practiced down in Marysville, and I sat down in the Shari Piel, Manhattan Special Olympics team member, ing long jump before the meet was even halfway over. She said she wanted to repeat her performance at the state meet in Wichita.

"I'm gonna try to win gold," she said.

DeVenuto said most everybody competing in the area meet would go on to the state meet.

They only need times and distances from the area meet to qualify them for the state meet, which is June 6-8 in Wichita.

Dale Billings, Twin Lake Tigers team member, said he was also excited about the state meet.

"I think Wichita will be the best time of my life," he said. DeVenuto said they expected more than 100 volunteers to come out and help. Civic groups, Circle K and living groups were among the volunteers. Maki Ishida, sophomore in architectural engineering and Circle K member, ▶ Get involved. said she had fun volunteering because Special Olympics is everyone was really friendly, and they were having a good time. "I think this is really good for the community," she said.

Members of the Neel family came out to volunteer after reading about the meet in the Wamego Times.

Kim Neel, Wamego resident, said at 537-7328. they wanted to get involved because they have a two-year-old brother with Down's Syndrome.

Rapper's mother suing Death Row

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES - The mother of slain rapper Tupac Shakur is suing Death Row Records for $17 million, claiming the hip-hop label failed to pay royalties and cheated Shakur out of millions of dollars.

The federal lawsuit filed Friday follows a $7.1-million lawsuit Death Row filed against Shakur's estate earlier this month, demanding reimbursement for money allegedly advanced to Shakur for cars, houses, jewelry and other expenditures, including recording and video costs.

Besides seeking unpaid royalties and repayment of disputed expense billings, the countersuit from Shakur's estate seeks to invalidate a handwritten 1995 contract Shakur signed with Death Row while in prison.

It also asks that 152 unreleased Shakur recordings, which his representatives cannot locate, be ordered into courtappointed receivership.

The suit is a response to what family attorney Richard Fischbein called the deafening silence from Death Row.

The primary dispute between Afeni Shakur, the rapper's mother, and Death Row is about money made by "All Eyez on Me," a double album by Shakur released shortly before the rapper was gunned down last September in Las Vegas. Some 5 million copies were sold.

Shakur died with little more than $150,000, yet Death Row reaped more than $100 million from his music, Fischbein said. "He was paid less than a million dollars as far as we can see," Fischbein said. "They've never opened the books so that

The company wrongly billed Shakur's account for others' expenses in a pattern of fraud and deception involving millions of dollars, Fischbein said. Named in the lawsuit were Death Row and its imprisoned president, Marion "Suge" Knight, who is serving a nine-year term for violating probation from a 1992 assault.

Two lawyers for Death Row, Ed Corey and David Kenner, did not return phone calls Saturday, but Kenner, who's also named in the lawsuit, denied any wrongdoing or mismanagement on Friday.

Citing the handwritten contract, Death Row claims Shakur's unreleased recordings are its property. The company also is seeking 20 percent of Shakur's earnings in the past 18 months as a management fee.

When I first heard the news, I thought it was a joke. It seemed to good to be Surely, someone was jerking my chain. Things like Kevin Lockett going to the Kansas City Chiefs just don't happen to me. But it did.

On Saturday, Carl Peterson and the

Thank you, Carl Peterson. You will be thanking K-State before you know it.

· As for Chris Canty, it was great to see him sneak into the first round. He will fit in well in the Patriots' defensive backfield, and he should get playing time from the start.

But as I watched five cornerbacks picked before Canty, it was apparent he should have stayed at K-State for his senior season.

Canty was picked after many lessdecorated, less-effective cornerbacks. He is a two-time all-American, but was the sixth cornerback selected because he still has many things to work on.

Canty should have stayed in Manhattan to work on his one-on-one pass coverage skills. NFL scouts did not dispute Canty's ability to make plays, but his ability in one-on-one coverage has been erratic. Some games he provided better coverage than a blanket, other games you hardly knew he was on the Spring football is here.

While looking at the projected twodeeps for the spring practices, one word kept popping into my head: rebuilding.

Now, while the K-State coaching staff would never go so far as to say it is a rebuilding year for the program, it might be inevitable. It is hard to replace so many people at so many skill positions and not expect a drop-off. This team is going to be very young and very inexperienced. While you cannot question the talent level on this team, talent does not fully compensate for playing time.

While the thought of a 7-4 record might make some Cat fans cringe, it might be closer to a reality than fans think, but I will wait until fall before I make an official prediction.

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY

A box of Lucky Charms is taped in the K-State baseball team's dugout - a seemingly simple way of achieving serendipity when things aren't going their way.

Sunday the Cats couldn't find much luck as they dropped a third straight game to No. 1 Texas Tech 12-7

Yeah, maybe we should have sprinkled some of them in the dirt," K-State coach Mike Clark said. K-State fell early as Tech second baseman Keith Ginter hit a solo homer to begin the inning. Joe Dillon followed with a double to left field and scored on Josh Bard's single and posted the score at 3-0. The Cats couldn't get anything going offensively at the beginning as Tech pitcher Monty Ward retired nine straight batters in three innings, recording six of his 10 strikeouts along Texas Tech rallied again in the fifth and sixth innings, tallying five runs en route to an 8-0 lead before K-State even But then K-State's stroke of luck changed in the bottom half of the sixth. Center fielder Garrett Bell led off with a double to left center and scored after Bard walked first baseman Jason Bichelmeyer. With the bases loaded, the Red Raiders were forced to do something they hadn't done in the series - dip

"And that was our main goal," second baseman J.D. Loudabarger said. "Once we got him out and rattled, we knew we had a chance."

And he was right. Texas Tech brought in Brad Ralston and with the bases loaded and one out. Ralston had a tough assignment. He walked Todd Fereday and scored third baseman Josh Marn. Loudabarger hit a blooper to second and reached on a fielder's

That rally notched the score at 8-4, and with the bases loaded things looked bright for the Cats as again Tech was forced to dip into its bullpen for the second time in the inning. But all hopes were dashed as Bell's monster shot to the warning track in right field fell just inches short of the yard and ended the inning.

"I thought the guys gave a great effort," Clark said. "Defensively we were marvelous and we played a good game, but not good enough against that team."

K-State flurried for another late rally in the ninth when right fielder Brian Bobier reached on a fielding error by the second baseman. Shortstop Heath Schesser hit a single out to center field and advanced Bobier to second. Mike Gardner pinch hit for Bichelmeyer and singled and advanced to second on an error that scored Poepard, Schesser and Bobier.

That was it for the Cats as they dropped to 22-18 on the year and 5-16 in the Big 12 Conference. The Cats did find some bright spots in the three-game series with Texas Tech, especially in pitching. On Saturday, Eric Yanz went 7.2 innings and gave up four runs and tallied nine strikeouts, which moved him into the No. 2 in all-time strikeouts surpassing Dave Tuttle.

"He's turned the corner since his surgery," pitching coach

CHRIS SCHULTE hits the ball during a tennis match against a Texas A&M player. Despite Schulte's efforts, the Cats lost to Texas A&M Saturday morning at L.P. Washburn Tennis Complex ► Texas, Texas A&M upend K-State to lengthen losing streak to 11 matches.

"Don't Mess with Texas," was heard loud and clear, as Texas A&M and the University of Texas swept the K-State women's tennis team Saturday and Sunday at the L.P. Washburn Tennis Complex.

The first loss for the Cats came Saturday against the Aggies (16-3, 9-1), who won the dual 6-3. The Aggies clinched the victory by winning the first five matches in singles.

The only win for the Cats in singles action came at the No. 6 spot where freshman Aisha Butt beat Julie Bahm 1-6, 6-1,

The Cats refused to give up after the singles action, as they took two of the three doubles matches.

At No. 1 doubles, Yana Dorodnova and Lena Piliptchak beat Nancy Dingwall and San Miguel 8-3. The other win for the Cats came at No. 2 doubles where Chris Schulte and Karen Nicholson beat Kathryn Scott and Leslie Dees 8-3.

Sunday, Texas (19-5, 11-0) extended the Cats' losing streak to 11 as they swept the Cats 9-0.

"We talked about the Texas team, what their strengths and weaknesses were," Cat coach Steve Bietau said. "I was very impressed with their team, not only with talent but with the way they remained focused."

The closest match of the day came at the No. 6 singles spot where senior Nikki battled / Nomena Lagerstrom Rasolomalala.

After being blanked in the first set 6-0, Lagerstrom battled back in the second to take the set 6-3.

"I really wasn't focused in that first set. I was trying to find my game plan," Lagerstrom said. "I had a new start in the second, and I figured out that her forehand was weaker. I just started to pick on it and concentrate more.'

As a senior, Lagerstrom said she started to think about it being her last home match.

"When I lost that first set, I just told myself to go out and have fun the rest of the way," she said. "I didn't want my last home match to be a 6-0, 6-0 loss."

The third set between the two was a real treat for fans. The two battled back and forth until the set was even at 6-6. In the tie-breaker, Lagerstrom was up 6-4, sitting on two match points. Rasolomalala would battle back from the match points and eventually take the tiebreaker 13-11.

In that 2-1/2 hour match, each player saved four match points in the 24-point tiebreak. The match forced Rasolomalala to be treated for dehydration, keeping her out of the No. 3 doubles match.

"Nikki played about as well as I have seen her play," Bietau said. "Her ground strokes were pretty consistent, and she was very aggressive off of the weak second serves. She never really took herself

FDR's words of wisdom

FDR might be best known for saying, "We have nothing to fear but fear itself," but his entire career was punctuated by his ability to summon loyalty and patriotism through speech.

"We have faith that future generations will know that here, in the middle of the 20th century, there came a time when men of good will found a way to unite and produce, and fight to destroy the forces of ignorance, and intolerance, and slavery, and war."

"In times like these it is immature and incidentally untrue - for anybody to brag that an unprepared America, single-handed, and with one hand tied behind its back, can hold off the whole world."

"We must always be wary of those who with sounding brass and the finkling cymbal preach the 'ism' of appeasement. We must especially beware of that small group of selfish men who would clip the wings of the American eagle in order to feather their own nests."

to wreckage of war plane

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAGLE, Colo. - Searchers found what could be wreckage of the missing warplane sticking out of a snow-covered mountain Sunday, the Air Force said.

The A-10 Thunderbolt has been missing since April 2, when Capt. Craig Button took off from a Tucson, Ariz., base on a routine training mission and veered north, heading to Colorado with four bombs aboard.

"Searchers have discovered what we believe is possible wreckage," said 2nd Lt. Keith Shepherd, a spokesman for Davis-Monthan Air Force Base in Arizona, from the search headquarters in Eagle.

Metal objects protruding from the snow on a sheer mountain face were spotted after noon by an Air Force helicopter, officials said.

Air crews were dispatched to try to examine the metal and determine whether ground crews could safely land and search the site on the 12,500-foot New York Mountain, about 15 miles southwest of Vail, officials said.

The weather Sunday was overcast and snow storms were forecast for the Shepherd said the site was within the primary search area and was consistent with visual sightings about the time the warplane disappeared.

The warplane was not carrying live rounds in its guns because it was on a training exercise. The Air Force said it believed the 500-pound bombs attached to the warplane were not activated and would have remained intact if the plane

Three days after Button, 32, disappeared, the search shifted to Colorado, where faint radar signals were detected in the central Rocky Mountains. Radar data and witness accounts indicate Button consciously broke away from his three-plane training formation and flew to Colorado

Air Force officials previously suggested Button could have become incapacitated and put the $9 million plane on People reported hearing booming noises in the Vail area on the day Button disappeared. Other witnesses have said they saw dark clouds that could have been smoke.

Weather conditions, rugged terrain and avalanche danger made search efforts difficult.

Officials used U-2 spy planes and helicopters to scour the mountains around Eagle, about 100 miles west of Button, a native of Massapequa, N.Y., had been a flight instructor at Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio, Texas, until he arrived in Tucson in February to train on the A-10.

Military investigators have been looking into his background in hopes of finding an explanation for his disappearance. The probe includes the Air Force's Office of Special Investigations, which typically handles criminal matters such as fraud and counterintelligence.

Air Force discovers clues | Search for boy ends with discovery of body

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEAUMONT, Calif. - A 10-yearold boy abducted at knifepoint more than two weeks ago was found dead in a rocky ravine, an autopsy showed Dental records helped coroners identify the body of Anthony Michael Martinez. Authorities didn't release a cause of death.

A Bureau of Land Management ranger found the body Saturday when he spotted vultures circling in the barren Berdoo Canyon area about 130 miles southeast of Los Angeles. The rocky canyon is about 90 miles east of where Anthony was forced into a car April 4 in a Beaumont alley.

Anthony died between two days and two weeks ago, Riverside County sheriff's Sgt. Mark Lohman said. Hot weather and exposure made the time of death difficult to pinpoint, he said.

Beaumont police and sheriff's officials wouldn't discuss whether there were signs of trauma on the body. The body was nude, hands and feet taped together, Lohman said. Most of the decomposed body was buried under Anthony's family and others in this farm town of 10,000 had been hanging yellow ribbons and putting up missing posters since he disappeared. They had hoped for the best until news reports Saturday said the body found in a ravine was Anthony's.

Authorities released a sketch of a slim, white man with blue eyes and a mustache. He was wearing a black-andred plaid shirt and blue jeans.

Although nearly 250 investigators had tracked thousands of leads and at

Anthony, his younger brother and two friends were playing behind their homes when a stranger pulled up and offered them a dollar to help find his lost cat. The man then apparently lunged at 6-year-old Marcos Medina, missed, and grabbed Anthony.

Residents searched on foot, horseback and all-terrain vehicles, combing some of California's most sparsely populated areas. Family members appeared on national television. A segment on the abduction appeared Saturday on "America's Most Wanted."

At Anthony's home, two trees in the front yard still bore yellow ribbons of Carolyn Rauch, the boy's great-aunt, attended services at the family's church a few blocks away early Sunday.

"The pastor did say a special prayer for Anthony in church this morning," she said. "Everybody was wearing the yellow ribbons. We're still making them. We're still handing them out."

an adaptation of Austin's classic novel, Gwyneth Paltrow stars as Emma in a witty comedy about making romance happen

REVIEW BY PORTIA SISCO

's not another snooty English movie. "Emma," recently released on video, is a heartwarming story of romance, adapted from the novel by Jane Austen.

"Emma," starring Gwyneth Paltrow, brings this classic story to the big screen. Paltrow is clever and authentic as Emma Woodhouse, a young woman who perhaps is more intelligent than mature. Jeremy Northam, playing Mr. Knightley, gives a stirring performance as Emma's conscience, and later the object of her desire. Dashing and warm-hearted, Knightley recognizes Emma's good traits, despite her tendency toward mischief. "Better to be without sense than to misapply it as you do." Knightley tells Emma, after learning of another scheme in which Emma has embroiled herself.

Emma thinks she has sisterly feelings toward Knightley, with whom she was raised. Their witty conversations add spice to their romance, even before it is apparent that Knightley is the perfect choice for Emma.

Emma, who declares, "The most beautiful thing in the world is a match well made," soon finds out that she is no matchmaker.

The fun of the movie is watching the none-too-wise Emma lead her impressionable friend, Harriet Smith (Toni Collette), in and out of a series of disastrous romances and hopeless crushes.

Despite the fact Emma is sure she is immune to such feelings, soon it becomes apparent she is just as susceptible as her friend.

The movie is well-adapted, with an authenticity one wouldn't expect from an actress with such a varied past that includes roles in "Moonlight and Valentino," and the action-driven serial murderer movie "Seven."

The story, however, is slightly watered down from Austen's original novel.

Compared to A&E's version of "Emma," Paltrow lacks the bite and wit that we expect from her.

Perhaps Paltrow's inherent good nature prevents her from playing Emma as the arrogant, caustic young woman, whose heart generous sometimes gets lost in her attempts to match-

Austen's stories have become a new hit, with reproductions coming out of the woodwork

Three of Austen's novels have been adapted recently, including "Pride and Prejudice" and "Sense and Sensibility," which won Emma Thompson a Golden Globe Award and an Academy Award for her screen

The new adaptations of Austen's classic stories make them more accessible and more interesting in a time where people give a show one chance or 22 minutes to entertain them.

While not based in action or adventure, the movie has appeal because of its cleverness and the intricate plot that leads the viewer to the tell-tale happy ending.

A sound bite of the "Emma" soundtrack an Academy Award winner for original musical or comedy score is on the E-Collegian. Point your web browser to (http://collegian.ksu edul and click on the A&E button to listen to it.

'Carnival' moves slowly, fails to capture audience

TANYA NISLY

A carnival complete with Siamese twins, magic shows and trained animal acts was in Manhattan for much of the month of April.

The musical, "Carnival," by Bob Merrill and Michael Stewart, has been at the Manhattan Center for the Arts for several weeks, and Saturday night was its

The musical took place in the early 1950s in France. The costumes were authentic, as were the tattered brown suitcases used as props.

The production started with Lili, played by Laura Sternberg, coming to the carnival in search of a job. She meets Marco the Magnificent, a magician played by William Pugh, who rescues her from a perverted carnival worker.

Although Marco first portrays himself as a hero, he is a womanizer and is constantly on the lookout for young, impressionable girls. Marco calls Lili a little mouse, and this is an accurate description of what she is. She is timid and afraid of the world. Review and she is desperately searching for someone to protect her. Lili is hired as an assistant to the magic show, but because of her insane infatuation with Marco, she gets in the way and ruins his magic show. Lili is fired from the magic show and is lost as to what she should do.

Then Lili meets the puppeteers, Paul (Michael Loupe) and Jacquot (Ivory Mazur). They befriend her through the help of their puppets, Carrot Top and Horrible Henry the Walrus.

Sad but true, the puppets in this musical steal the show.

Horrible Henry added true humor to this production.

Paul and Jacquot give Lili a place in their show interacting with the puppets, and they become a hit with the audience and are moved to the main tent.

Lili still doesn't think that she is happy and continues to moon over Marco much to the irritation of Paul. Because of his jealousy, Paul yells at Lili, only pushing her closer to the slimy Marco.

Even though Paul has a rough exterior, underneath he is really the kind Carrot Top. Lili is incapable of seeing this, and even goes so far as to sing a song titled "I

Sternberg had a clear voice with good enunciation, and Loupe also sang his heartfelt songs in a clear tenor

This musical moved slowly and took too long to develop the plot. The children and some of the adults in the audience were restless before intermission.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)- There's a compact disc out there you should buy called 'Apocalyptica Plays Metallica By Four Cellos.' Sugar Magnolia doesn't kid. Its crunchy sounds will parallel your own feelings this week as you lock horns with just about everyone you encounter. Just remember: Tomorrow's another day, one in which Metallica might die of a drug overdose.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)- This is your week to shine, so grab that cloth and start polishing yourself. Peers might get irritated with your perky springtime demeanor, so you might want to appear sullen when they start taking their aggressions out on you. Not everyone can be an Aries.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)- Water can be fun, and it's something you need to look into this week. Drink it continuously throughout the day, then excuse yourself from class every five minutes to "make." You'll be surprised at the abundance of the trips necessary.

A NEW USE FOR INDEX CARDS?

In November, a 50-year-old man was arrested in Albuquerque, N.M., on a complaint by his 13-year-old stepdaughter that he made her perform a series of bizarre acts written out on index cards and which were supposedly to toughen her in her quest to get a learner's driving permit. According to the complaint, the girl was allowed to drive the truck until the man turned up an index cord with an instruction, which she had to follow before driving some more. Among other things, the cards called for her to pour shampoo and dirt into her hair; wear a dog collar; do situps; stand naked in the glare of the truck's headlights; and stand tied to a bar with a ball in her

Agri-marketing students attend national meeting

K-State students found opportunities and recognition last week in Nashville, Tenn., last week at the National Agri-Marketing Convention.

Thirteen K-State National Agri-Marketing Association students attended the convention. They competed against other student chapters throughout the country in the national student agricultural marketing competition.

Scott Lynn, senior in agribusiness, competed in the marketing competition for the second year.

"Since I had been on the team last year, I had a better idea of what to expect. This helped the team know how to tailor the product better, make the written plan more user-friendly and the oral presentation more personable," he said.

The team fulfilled its goal of advancing farther in the competition than last year's team. The team made it out of the first round and into the semi-final round of competition.

"I thought the competition was super. It was a great opportunity to sharpen my public-speaking skills, which will assist my efforts to run for state FFA officer," Kevin Henke, freshman in animal science, said.

K-State also received recognition among student NAMA chapters by winning the most innovative idea award for chapter recruitment. In addition, K-State made it to the final round of competition and placed among the top six schools for most outstanding student chapter.

"I really enjoyed competing with the other schools. NAMA is not that much more work than other campus organizations, but the benefits are much greater than other clubs. No other club has as many opportunities to meet professionals, network and help your future career," Chris Stockebrand, junior in agricultural economics, said.

Stockebrand received the most prestigious NAMA award, the national NAMA scholarship, and brought top honors back to K-State. The scholarship was awarded to Stockebrand for his achievements in agriculture, leadership and academics. He competed against students from across the nation for the scholarship

"When I applied, I didn't think I had a chance. When they announced the winner I was surprised. The scholarship will come in handy for college," he

The convention also offered students a chance to network through a luncheon with agri-marketing professionals, a trade show and a careers fair.

"The conference was a great opportunity to meet professionals, make contacts and get realworld experience. Last year I received an internship with a company that was a member of the professional NAMA organization.

"I think that the contacts I have received will help me get a job this year with another NAMA-affiliated company," Lynn said.

Mass honors victims of bombing

DENVER - A church bell tolled, Catholics celebrated a memorial Mass and baseball fans stood for a moment of silence Saturday as the city observed the second anniversary of the Oklahoma City bomb-

A block away from the courthouse where bombing defendant Timothy McVeigh is on trial, a bell tolled 168 times once for each victim while church leaders read off the names of the dead.

In attendance were Colorado Gov. Roy Romer and his wife.

"This is the normal thing we can try to do to identify with the families," Romer said beforehand. "The suffering and the trauma is not over." The Catholic church that had the interdenominational prayer service is virtually in the shadow of the federal courthouse, where McVeigh is being tried on murder conspiracy charges for the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil. Security in the area was high Saturday, with barricades set up outside the courthouse and federal and local police patrolling the grounds.

Officers were seen going through the bushes across the street from the church, and manhole covers on the streets

After a morning prayer service, a van drove by slowly in front of the church, a federal officer scanning the small gathering on the sidewalk through mirrored sunglasses. In the evening, a full memorial Mass was celebrated by about 300 people, who sang hymns and prayed for the vic-

"Everyone would like to see themselves slip into the first round," Lockett said. "But I feel that this was really a good spot and a good match for me.'

Coming into the draft, the Chiefs were concentrating on improving their passing offense. In particular, they were looking for playmakers at the receiver position.

Lake Dawson, who caught only five balls the whole year, was the only Chief wide receiver who averaged more than 15 yards a catch. As a team, the Chiefs averaged just 180.6 yards passing a Lockett said the Chiefs were interested and had been in contact with him before the draft.

They had been in touch with me quite a bit. I knew they were interested," Lockett said. "They were looking for a wide receiver that had big-play capability. They got a great tight end in Tony Gonzalez, and I'll be able to add to a solid receiving core."

Lockett comes to the Chiefs as the Big 12's all-time reception leader with catches, which included a school record 72 catches last season. Lockett has also set school records with 3,032 career receiving yards and 26 career touchdowns.

"Production is a big part of his game," Terry Bradway, Chiefs director of college scouting, said. "We had a chance to see Kevin play for four years. He is an outstanding wide receiver with excellent hands."

Chiefs head coach Marty Schottenheimer was very impressed with Lockett, saying as far as wide receivers, he had Lockett's hands rated

If the Chiefs hadn't grabbed Lockett, it wouldn't have taken long for him to be selected. Sitting with the 23rd pick in the second round, the Pittsburgh Steelers were very interested in Lockett.

"If the Chiefs hadn't picked me, then Pittsburgh would have. They were pret-ty high on me," Lockett said. "They had called me right before Kansas City picked to see how I was doing and to tell me they were going to probably pick Once Lockett was gone, the Steelers settled on selecting wide receiver Will Blackwell from San Diego State.

Lockett said he will report to the Chief's mini-camp on Friday.

out of points." Dinah Watson provided the only other close match of the day at the No. 4 singles spot. After being up in the first set, Watson dropped the set, 6-4 to Melody Falco. Falco went on to win the second set by the same score, 6-4.

Watson and Lagerstrom tried to avoid the shutout during the last match of the day at No. 3 doubles.

The Cats duo broke serve to even the score 4-4 against Falco and Ashley Mokry. But the Aggies battled back to take the match 8-5.

Lagerstrom said her serve was a big problem in the match.

"We got into a vicious cycle of winning two games and then coming to my serve," she said. "I was tired and serving against the wind caused problems. Winning my serve was the key. We had to do that to be in the match. If I couldn't have held serve a couple of times, we would have won that match."

With the loss, the Cats finished the regular season 7-13 overall and 2-9 in conference play. The Cats will return to action this Thursday when they travel to Austin, Texas, for a first-round match in the Big 12 Tournament.

Iraq orders helicopters to violate no-fly zone

BAGHDAD, Iraq -Saddam Hussein ordered his helicopters into the U.S.-patrolled no-fly zone on Monday, saying he intended to fly home weary Iraqi pilgrims returning from Mecca.

Any U.S. action threatening the aircraft or the pilgrims will be met with the suitable response to deter aggression, the state-run Iraqi News Agency warned.

The United States urged Iraq to stay out of the no-fly zone or face unspecified retaliation.

"We will respond appropriately, but we're not going to shoot down civilian helicopters," presidential press secretary Mike McCurry said.

Western allies set up the no-fly zone after defeating Iraq in the 1991 Gulf War. Western forces patrol the skies over southern Iraq to protect the people there from Iraqi reprisals for a failed rebel-

The zone was extended in September to punish Saddam for sending his army into northern Iraq to support one Kurdish faction against another.

It now covers an area stretching from the southern suburbs of Baghdad down to Iraq's borders with Kuwait and Saudi

The Iraqi News Agency said the helicopters will begin ferrying sick and exhausted Muslim pilgrims from the Iraqi-Saudi border on Monday. It did not say how many aircraft would be involved or give the number of the pilgrims. Presumably, the flights would be on military helicopters.

By nightfall, there was no word on whether any flights had taken place.

The decision to use helicopters to ferry home the pilgrims was announced after a meeting Monday of the Revolutionary Command Council and the leadership of the ruling Baath Party - Iraq's highest bodies. Saddam chaired the meeting.

On April 9, Saddam sent an Iraqi Airways jet carrying 104 pilgrims to Saudi Arabia for the pilgrimage in Mecca, Saudi Arabia, site of the holiest shrine in Islam.

The flight defied a U.N. ban on flights in and out of Iraq - one of a broad set of sanctions imposed in 1990 for Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. The helicopter flights would violate the sanc-

Clean water becomes scarce in midst of massive flooding

GRAND FORKS, N.D. - With a record flood filling most of the city with filthy water. city officials said Monday they were considering stringing a hose up to 22 miles across the prairie to bring in clean water so people could at least wash their hands.

"What people take for granted day to day, like taking a shower and washing clothes, isn't going to happen for quite a while," said National Guard Capt. Greg Bowen. "The sanitary conditions are primitive at best."

The Red River that had flooded 75 percent of the city also shut down the municipal water treatment plant, and there was no water service for the estimated 10 percent of the city's 50,000 inhabitants who hadn't left yet.

"The toilet part is the worst," said Richard George. "We just flush it with melted snow. We were melting snow on the barbecue grill."

Portable bathrooms and drinking water stations were scattered throughout the city's stilldry extreme west end. In public and motel restrooms, the stench built up until crews could periodically come by with flushing water.

The city also supplied most of the water for Grand Forks Air Force Base, where more than 2,000 of the city's refugees were staying.

The base still had a reserve of clean water, was pumping some water from a nearby small town and planned to bring in 20 large tanker trucks, said a spokesman, Capt. Byron Spencer.

In the meantime, he said: "We're asking people not to use the washing machine, limit their shower usage, things like that."

President Clinton planned to fly over the flooded area and visit the Air Force base on Tuesday, the White House said.

City officials held a meeting Monday after-

Character, times combined in FDR's administration

NICOLE KIRBY

There is a philosophical debate among political historians about President Franklin Roosevelt was a great man because the times demanded it or whether he was simply a great man.

Pulitzer Prize-winning government scholar James MacGregor Burns said Monday afternoon at the FDR symposium that the truth was somewhere in between the two

"I would suggest the idea that there is a frame of historical causation that dominates a leader but still allows a great amount of latitude,"

Roosevelt could have handled his presidency differently, Burns said. He could have approached the Great Depression with a defeatist attitude instead of developing the New Deal and handling his public relations through fireside chats on

Although he said Roosevelt was in some ways a great man, Burns presented the arguments that Roosevelt was what he called a chip on the wave of events.

"For us and for him, the Great Depression was a great tragedy, but for him it was also a political boost," he said.

Roosevelt's ideas were not new, Burns said. They had already been suggested by earlier progressives. In addition, there was great pressure from the people of the United States for action to ease the effects of the depression.

During the discussion period after Burns' speech, panelists addressed the question of what history might have been like if Roosevelt had not been president.

Arthur Schlesinger Jr., another Pulitzer-winning scholar who had spoken earlier in the day, said America came close to finding out

In a tribute to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, two-time Pulitzer Prize winner Arthur Schlesinger Jr. recounted the stirring years of Roosevelt's office during peace and war Monday morning in the Union Little Schlesinger, professor emeritus in humanities at City University in New York and one of America's most prolific 20th-century political writers, said "The Legacy of FDR, A Roosevelt Symposium" symposium was special to him and his generation because they were the last historians alive when Roosevelt was in office.

"More than half a century has passed, and not many are alive to recall those years when President Franklin D. Roosevelt was alive." he said. "The new generation of scholars who were born after the Great Depression and the second war look back on the 1930s and '40s without romantic memories and tend to cast cold eyes on those who were regarded as the great leaders of our time.

"The second Roosevelt joins presidents Washington and Lincoln as one of the three greatest American presidents."

Roosevelt was inaugurated in 1933, during a grim time in the history of democracy, Schlesinger said.

"He inherited a nation stricken by depression with more than a quarter million unemployed, the gross national product cut in half, the banking system on the verge of collapse and gross inequities in income and education," he said.

But Roosevelt's goal was to make life better for average people, Schlesinger said

"Roosevelt, the apostle of action and of the experiment, completely changed the landscape of American lives," he said. "He

Graves vetoes

 Governor wants communities to decide on concealed-weapons policies on an individual basis.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - Gov. Bill Graves Monday vetoed a bill that would allow licensed Kansans to carry a concealed handgun.

Graves cited a provision of the bill prohibit cities from passing more restrictive ordinances and are in direct conflict with Kansas' long history of local con-

The veto comes as no surprise to people who have followed the issue. Graves has said repeatedly that he is unenthusiastic about the bill and that he does not believe a majority of Kansans are interested in carrying concealed firearms.

He also said that he supports current handgun laws - something he said was lost in the current debate.

"I understand the importance of Kansans being able to feel safe and secure," Graves wrote in his veto message, sent to members of the House, where the bill originated.

Is this a good thing? The editorial board commends Graves for his interpretation.

The concealed-weapons bill is HB2159. It can be found at (www.ink.org/public/legislative/full-textbill.html).

"Some people have suggested that they would like to carry a concealed handgun for their own personal protection, but for many Kansans, knowing hidden guns are on our streets does not contribute to their sense of security," the governor said.

"In addition, more guns mean more injuries and deaths from accidental shootings."

An attempt to override the veto is expected when the Legislature reconvenes April 30 for its wrap-up

The bill was passed by the House, 78-44, and by the Senate 22-18. A two-thirds vote in the House and the Senate is required to override a veto. That is 84 votes in the House and 27 in the Senate.

Rep. Gary Hayzlett, R-Lakin, the primary sponsor of the measure, said he tried twice to talk to the governor about the bill, but Graves never did respond before Monday's veto.

"It was not unexpected by me," Hayzlett said.

The bill would set up a system for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to license citizens with clean criminal records and trained in the use of firearms to carry concealed handguns.

They could not carry them into government buildings, bars, schools or businesses that post "no carry"

The bill barred cities and counties from enacting ordinances prohibiting concealed carry.

Hayzlett said allowing local units of government to enact stricter controls would have rendered the bill

"It would be a totally worthless bill," Hayzlett said. "You wouldn't know where to travel in a city, in the state, without a violation."

But in his veto message, Graves said local authorities must be allowed to craft gun ordinances tailored to their communities.

Samuel Penn is accused of fatally stabbing Sgt. Kenneth Snider, 48, with a kitchen knife after Snider and three other sheriff's officers responded to a domestic disturbance Friday at Penn's house just outside Wichita.

Penn was charged Monday in Sedgwick County District Court with one count of first-degree murder and three counts of aggravated assault of a law enforcement officer. He was being held in the Sedgwick County Jail on $1-million bond.

In Kansas, prosecutors can seek the death penalty for a person accused of killing a law enforcement official.

Jeanette Clary, a spokeswoman for District Attorney Nola Foulston, declined comment on whether the office would seek the death penalty for Penn. He was assigned an attorney who specializes in death penalty cases.

Snider, a 20-year veteran of the Sedgwick County Sheriff's Department. was scheduled to be buried Monday afternoon following a memorial service at Central Community Church in Wichita.

JUDGE ALLOWS ELECTROCUTION TO PROCEED IN FLORIDA.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. - A judge today paved the way for Florida to resume its method of execution, ruling that the electric chair does not amount to cruel and unusual punishment.

Attorneys for condemned police killer Leo Jones cited the fiery execution of Pedro Medina last month in challenging electrocution as unconstitutional

State experts denied the defense contention that Medina suffered.

Orange flames burst from under the right side of Medina's mask March 25, the second time in seven years a botched execution set a condemned inmate's head

The hearing ordered by the Florida Supreme Court resulted in two stays of execution for Jones top-grade cadet Student earns national award with hard work

The ROTC program at K-State produced an individual who earned the George C. Marshall award, which is given for hard work and careful instruction.

Tyler Houdek, senior in history, was given the Marshall ROTC award at a ceremony at the Virginia Military Institution in Lexington.

"It recognizes the top senior cadet from every university in the nation," Houdek said.

The award has been given out annually for the past 20 years, Houdek said.

Cadets from 260 universities attended the seminar Wednesday through Friday. As part of the program, the cadets were broken up in groups of 10 to 12. They were given topics, and one cadet from each group gave a presentation about their discussion

Houdek said the cadets were treated with a variety of speakers and ambassadors who talked to them about the future of the Army

Houdek said he was surprised to find out that he was the recipient of the award, due to the parity of the senior cadets

"I was taken aback at first because the Marshall award had never been played up there at K-State, which is a mistake," Houdek said. "I assumed our battalion commander would get it, mostly because of the posi-

Houdek said all of the senior cadets were in the same area of test scores and results.

"Any one of us could have gone and represented the University with the same ability," Houdek said. Capt. Barry Adams, recruiting officer for the ROTC, said Houdek's dedication was a determining factor in the decision for the honor.

"Tyler is dedicated to what he wants to do scholastically as well as ROTC and his professionalism were determining factors," Adams said.

The honor Houdek earned continued the tradition of the ROTC at K-State. The ROTC program at K-State has been rated the top program west of the Mississippi three out of the past five years, Adams said

Adams also said the program had been rated the top ROTC unit in Kansas for the past five years.

"The main thing I got out of all of this is the level of instruction I got," Houdek said. "The people around me taught me and instructed me and that will help me

Houdek said the award was important to him but the ROTC program took top priority.

"It means a lot to me being down there with the secretary of state and shaking hands with the chief of staff of the Army," Houdek said.

"But ROTC and what I've gained means more. The friends I made and instruction I got I'll have the rest of

SARA EDWARDS

The K-State Orchestra will perform its final concert of the year at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

The concert is free and open to the public and will last about an hour and 45 minutes

The orchestra will perform three pieces. It will accompany Stacy Marshall, junior in music education, while she performs her flute solo. She will perform "Carmen Fantasy" by Georges Bizet and Random Wilson. Marshall is performing the solo because she won the Concerto and Aria Contest.

The orchestra is performing "Symphony No. 2 in D Major" by Ludwig van Beethoven and 'Symphony No. 2 in D Major" by Jean Sibelius.

Darin Fincher, senior in music education and cellist, said the two symphonies were similar in style, but contrasting enough.

He said the Beethoven piece is not played as much as some of his others. "This is a good chance to hear one of his lesser-played symphonies," he Erica McKinney, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and violin player, said the music and the length of the

Bomb threats shut down London; IRA gets blame

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON - A string of telephoned bomb threats tied London's air. rail and road traffic in knots on Monday and momentarily distracted politicians from the national election campaign. Authorities blamed the Irish Republican Army

Prime Minister John Major, expressing contempt for the IRA, praised the stoicism and good humor of the traveling public, which struggled all morning with citywide traffic snarls. No bombs were found

"It is essential to take these warnings seriously," Major said. "The IRA have murdered in the past. They will not hesitate to murder again."

No one claimed responsibility, although the people who called in the threats used recognized IRA code

"It's a clear attempt by the IRA to disrupt the British general election" on May 1, said Tony Blair, leader of the Labor Party, which is way ahead in the polls.

In late March, Labor's Northern Ireland spokeswoman, Mo Mowlam, suggested that the Sinn Fein party could be invited to join all-party talks in Northern Ireland in June if their allies in the IRA quickly restored their cease-fire, which lasted 17 months until February 1996.

The IRA's answer was more disruption and violence: a bomb hoax that canceled the Grand National horse race on April 5, the shooting of a policewoman in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, on April 10, and a bomb Friday

Graves applauded for vetoing gun bill

fter languishing in debate for months, the proposal to allow Kansans to carry concealed weapons was shot down Monday by Gov. Bill Graves.

Graves' reasons for the veto, however, were not anything as lofty as a philosophical predisposition EDITORIAL BOARD to gun control. Instead, it reflects an important statement about limiting government and giving Kansas voters true power.

Graves vetoed the proposal because he said he was concerned that it did not provide individual communities the option to pass more restrictive ordinances.

Such insight should be applauded. Whichever side of the debate Kansans might favor, the voters in local communities deserve the right to decide what is best for them and their community.

No one can deny that living in Wichita is different from living in Ogden. Communities reflect the values and opinions of their citizens - something state representatives might not be in touch with when considering such an issue.

Ideally, the concealed-weapons proposal should be decided on by referendum vote at the local level. This would tailor the law to those it would directly affect. Wichitans might not want the option to carry guns in their pockets - but citizens of Ogden might.

A referendum vote would also cut down interference of lobbyist groups and give a true representation of what local citizens and authorities want, without the state government making the deci-According to The Associated Press, Graves said,

"Some people have suggested they would like to carry a concealed handgun for their own personal protection, but for many Kansans, knowing hidden guns are on our streets does not contribute to their sense of security."

The state should find out how many Kansans fall on either side of the issue - and let them decide for themselves.

National debate about smoking hits home

Cigarette butts lay on the kitchen table trying to escape in an exodus from the over-crowded ashtray. The ashtrays in the living room are fuller than a public swimming pool in the middle of July.

I've visited dumps that smell better

The stench has grown so intense my neighbors have imported a rain forest into their home and closed all their windows just so they can breathe. Last night I even saw a dog collapse in our front yard from smoke inhalation. Poor doggie.

The trouble is I don't even notice the aroma anymore until I'm walking on campus and someone says, "I didn't know you smoked." When this recurring incident first began I just blurted a simple, "I don't." But nobody ever seemed to believe me. All their faces accused me of lying. So now I just say, "Yes, I smoke. Can I have one of your cigarettes?"

In all honesty, I don't smoke.

My roommate does.

I've tried everything to get him to stop. I've begged. I've implored. I've acted mature. I've acted immature. I've yelled. I've even done the polka, but nothing works.

My roommate and his friends, who consistently haunt the house, keep right on puffing.

My domicile has become a clouded microcosm of the country at large. It would seem everyone in the United States is barking at one anoth-

This little civil war at my house fits perfectly with the present strife between the cigarette industry and the multitude of litigation with which it has been presented by a large portion of the state attorneys general in the United States. It seems everyone who has ever lit a cigarette is now suing or planning to sue the tobacco industry for ills, costs or stupidity their cancer sticks might have caused them. The exorbitant costs of defending itself and the probability that it would lose the suits if they were to ever land in court has led the tobacco industry to seek a settlement with eight of the 23 states that are suing its butt.

If a settlement is reached, the tobacco companies will receive full immunity from any future suits. In return, the plaintiffs will get billions of dollars in an adequate period of time and the tobacco companies will decrease the amount of advertising they exhale into

It is a positive thing that states are going to receive some type of monetary restitution. At the same time, states should not have had to bear the brunt of the health expenses smokers have encountered in the first place.

It's asinine to pay for someone else's stupidity. Before smokers got sick and started hacking and reeling with cancer they made a cognizant choice to smoke. The smoker should have to reap the fiscal and health consequences of that choice, not my tax dollars.

Now that the states are going to get some cash from the tobacco industries, I want my share. I live with a smoker, so I figure I deserve it. Maybe I should sue the Philip Morris Co. for forcing me to deal with smoke on a daily basis. I'd probably lose, but I need a hobby anyway. Instead of suing, maybe someone should tell my roommate that smoking is related to a sixth of the annual deaths in the United States, or that smokers take longer to recover from illness, or that huffin' and puffin' on that cancer stick increases the chance of cancer 100 percent, according to an Associated Press story in the April 18 Collegian.

All these facts aside, I still think my roommate should have the right to do as he wishes. After all, in the words of Don Corleone, "A man must have his vices." And he also pays

What I'm thinking is maybe we should reach a settlement not unlike the tobacco companies and the state attorneys general. He could pay me a billion dollars and reduce the amount he smokes in the house, and I'll never bitch at him again

If this compromise does not work, I guess I could just start smoking big fat, green, nauseating cigars. The smoke is thicker and smells worse than any cigarette and, like I said,

SOLUTIONS FOR FARRELL LIBRARY AREN'T REAL SOLUTIONS

The April 17 Collegian article about Farrell Library and the minutes from the April 8 Faculty Senate meeting just arrived and reported more interesting news about library funding. The dean of libraries indicated the following:

1. Money saved by eliminating many science journal subscriptions will be spent on monographs. Those of us who try to teach up-todate courses and do some research are unaware of how such publications will provide current informa-

2. Those of us who read journals for lecture preparation and research will, in the future, be able to purchase copies of articles through charges to our personal accounts (read: salary).

3. The KSU Foundation, which has been quite successful recently in securing funds for athletic facilities, was unable to find potential donors interested in contributing to the library. Was any serious attempt made to explain to donors the importance of a university library?

Consider the following:

a. Indirect Cost funds, brought into K-State from out-of-state sources directly as a result of faculty research grants, are being used to pay off remaining costs of past University building programs (rather than in support of the research for which they were awarded), and

b. considering the lack of understanding or appreciation at virtually every state and administrative level of the value to students, the state and society of faculty-initiated, non-applied, pure research performed at a land grant university, and

c. considering the preferences of private donors, rather than University leadership, is determining the choices of projects for which the KSU Foundation is only able to secure funds, it therefore seems that:

1. Faculty salaries should be increased to pay for their future use of library facilities for teaching and research, and

2. Manhattan should market itself as an excellent site for a professional sports franchise.

Perhaps K-State students and faculty will be able to find some up-to-date newspapers to read in the Manhattan Public Library.

Insurance companies' racket wastes policy holders' money

As a small-scale wheat farmer in western Sedgwick County, my grandfather had ample opportunity to observe the deleterious effect insurance expenses had on his profit margin and thus his livelihood. "Money spent on insurance is money poured down a rat hole," he used to

Now the insurance companies - the occupants of the rat hole - have proposed a new scheme that they claim, if implemented at the state or federal level, will reduce insurance rates while maintaining the same level of loss protec-

A version of this plan is already in effect in New Jersey and allows people to qualify for lower rates on auto insurance so long as they renounce their right to sue for pain and suf-

Most insurance companies support this plan, because it promises to nip in the bud insurance revolts such as the one in California that resulted in the state legislature putting ceilings on auto rates.

Consumer advocates like Ralph Nader oppose it, claiming that painand-suffering suits are often the only way for accident victims to obtain redress for loss of their ability to work and other nonmedical consequences of their injuries.

Policyholders fed up with high rates and lousy service deserve, and ought to demand, better. Since the Supreme Court ruled that insurers were not covered by the interstate-commerce laws in the Paul v. Virginia case in 1940, insurance has been regulated on a state-by-state basis.

This has allowed the insurance companies to pursue a divide-and-conquer strategy whereby states refuse to aggressively regulate insurance for fear nobody will want to sell it within their

California and New Jersey have been able to flout the insurance industry only because they represent nearly 20 percent of the American market

In the other 48 states, insurers are still guaranteed underwriting profit and so can fix rates high enough to allow them to pay claims entirely out of policyholder premiums, with a small amount of money left over.

Insurance companies maximize this profit by investing the premiums in the stock market, leaving only a small amount in cash reserves at any given time to pay claims.

They increase their volume by getting their state regula-

Policyholders fed up with high rates and lousy service deserve, and ought to demand, better. Since the Supreme Court ruled that insurers were not covered by the interstate-commerce laws in the Paul v. Virginia case in 1940, insurance has been regulated on a state-by-state basis.

approve increasingly refined rating schemes, which allow them to provide marginally lower rates to proportionately much larger groups of low-risk policyholders while cranking up rates for the high-risk minority.

Each group finances its own risk and so produces underwriting profit for the insurer.

Insurers also employ the same classic profitmaximization techniques used by other businesses, such as increasing productivity by cutting the number of adjusters while keeping their workload the same, or refusing to pay just claims unless the policyholder threatens to sue.

The best way to regulate insurance entails setting a maximum profit for insurance companies as a percentage of their total revenues, both from policyholders and the stock market.

If this percentage were made a fraction of the actual operating profit margins of most insurance companies, they would no longer have an incentive to tread on their consumers. In fact they would have to treat them like royalty because they could increase their profit in this system only by attracting more customers. This, in turn, implies lower rates and prompt service on claims. One could argue that this scheme wrongfully restrains an insurer's constitutionally guaranteed right to make money by any means short of grand theft, or that by decreasing the insurance companies' interest in the stock market as a way of making money, it deprives publicly held companies of the capital they need to bring out new products and even sets the stage for a market crash.

These fears lack justification. The small businessman (including the Kansas wheat farmer) enjoys a similar right to make money, on which the insurers have been infringing for the past 57 years. Furthermore, manufacturing and high-tech companies that rely on invested insurance premiums for capital not only have less of it - the insurers siphon off money as dividends for their stockholders - but are also unproductively insulated from the consumers who buy their products and by right have final control over their destinies

A brew-it-yourself job

More and more college students are opting to make beer at home. It takes a little time, but it's better than Natural Light.

STORY BY AND GRAPHICS BY HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH . PHOTOS BY BRANDON WHITE

Creating your own homebrew treats

2) The night before brewing, remove the chlorine for your reserve supply of brewing water by boiling 2 gallons of tap water 15 minutes uncovered. Cover the pot, and let the water cool overnight.

3) To make extract wort, add malt extract to hot water in the boiling kettle.

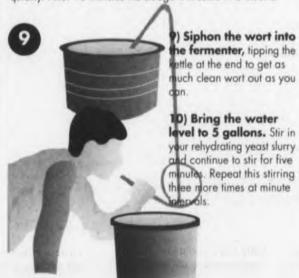

4) As soon as the wort comes to a boil, add hops.

5) Boil the wort with the hops for 45 minutes. Then, stir in your finishing hops and cover.

6) Fill a bathtub or large sink with cold water, and place the kettle in the sink to cool it to about 70 degrees.

7) Sanitize a pint measuring cup and add a cup of warm water. Adjust the water temperature to between 95 and 105 degrees. Add the yeast. Stir, cover and let stand for 10 minutes.

8) When the wort is cooled, set it on a table and stir quickly. After 10 minutes the sludge will settle in a mound.

11) Using the hydrometer, take a specific gravity reading. Put the lid on. Fill the oarlock halfway with water, and fit it into the hole.

12) Set the wort in a cool place — between 65 and 70 degrees. With an oarlock, you can judge that fermentation is over - usually within three to five days - when the bubbling is down to once or twice each minute.

13) (Optional) Siphon the beer off the old decaying yeast. Fit the oarlock, and let the beer settle out for at least five days. Keep it in a cool spot ideally 55 degrees. 14) Sanitize the bottles.

It is best to clean the bottles ahead of time and sanitize them just before use, preferably in a dishwasher using the heat-dry cycle

15) (Optional) Siphon your beer back into the fermenter, being careful to avoid splashing and bubbles.

16) Make up a syrup by dissolving your priming sugar in a pint of boiling water

17) To fill the bottles, siphon the beer out of the fermenter.

18) Set the caps on the bottle and let sit uncrimped for approximately 15.

19) Crimp the bottlecaps and rinse the bottle off. Put the cases in a dark spot at room temperature, and let them sit for a few days. Then move the beer to a cooler spot for at least two weeks to allow carbonation to develop.

Brewing at home is easier than it looks or less than $100 and three or four hours of free time, home-brewed beer can offer an alternative to Coors Light party balls and cases of Natural Light. "It's just like baking a cake," said Marty Gilmore, first-year veterinary medicine student. "Let it cook for a while. Let it sit for a while, and then you drink it."

A bare-bones home brewing setup costs about $50, and a fancier system can be purchased for $100. Depending on the type of beer, ingredients for a 5-gallon batch - a little more than two cases — can be purchased for $25. "It's gotten really popular in the last five people, a couple, three or four have done it at least once or know someone who's done it." Weiss, who has been home brewing for 10 years, has watched the hobby evolve, as homebrewing kits and stores popped up across the "Brewing your own beer has gotten easier and easier," he said. "Some people, who thought it was tricky and beyond them, found out it isn't." To call home brewing a new trend is a bit misleading. Beer has been around since the beginning of time - almost. As farmers began growing grains, beer brewing followed on the heels of bread making. The "buzz" from drinking beer gained religious significance. The brew became one way the peasants who built the pyramids were paid. In the days of poor sanitation, when city folks threw their waste into the street, the water supply was unsafe. Boiling the water used to make beer killed harmful organisms, and both adults and children drank the brew.

In beer brewing's most recent chapter - the home-brew chapter - college students are key players. Gilmore became interested in the hobby after spending a summer working at Metcalf Discount Liquor in Overland Park. Every night after work, Gilmore and friends would sample a different expensive beer. An appreciation of good beer is a must for a home brewer, Gilmore said.

'You have to have a taste for beer and good beer," Gilmore said. "If you buy Natty Light at 11 p.m. on Saturday night and pound it can by can, you're probably not the kind of guy who's going to like to home brew."

Besides, the home brew is unlikely to make you get drunk faster, Gilmore said. "You know before you brew the alcohol content," he said. "It's not wildly potent stuff. It's not like grandpa's sour mash out in the shed."

Gilmore discovered the Homebrew Pro Shoppe, a Kansas City store that sponsored a club of home brewers. After attending a couple meetings, he was booked.

Gilmore's equipment is mainly of the storebought variety, but more experienced brewers branch off and dabble with kegging and creating their own malts, among other things.

Inventing his own equipment, which now involves transforming an old coffee pot into a device for holding temperature, keeps Weiss busy. The hobby can be messy, and he tries to keep things under control.

"I have a very understanding wife, and I don't want to push," he said. "She bakes bread, so she's into yeast also."

The mess is worth it for Weiss, who is partial to his home brew and only drinks the storebought stuff when his home-brew supply is

"When you're brewing, you have to have a bottle in hand. If you've consumed the last beer, you have to go out and make an emergency

Brad Shank, graduate student in statistics, shares Weiss' fascination in home-brew gadgets. His list of stuff includes 12 to 15 glass carboys, 15 to 18 five-gallon corn kegs, a pot, a mash turn, a cooler and a refrigerator with two

How much money does he have invested in his home brew supplies?

K-State assistant volleyball coach, Stacy Metro, and former head coach Jim Moore are the proud parents of a new baby boy. On Saturday Stacy gave birth to an 8-pound, 3-ounce baby boy, who was given the name Matthew Ryan Moore. Matthew was 21 inches long at birth. All are reportedly doing fine.

Kansas City's draft picks finally will prove worthwhile to a team in need

Memo to Kansas City Chiefs fans:

You should be happy. Finally, King Carl and Marty did something right in the draft.

Finally, they went out and got players they not only needed but, also, ones who would be produc-

Over the years, it has seemed like the Chiefs just didn't understand the concept of the draft. Let me bring in example one: last year's

McCORMICK SHANE McCORMICK is a senior in radio/TV journalism. You can e mail comments to Shane at (shanem first-round selection, defensive back Jerome Woods from Memphis. The word "useless" comes to mind when thinking of Woods' role at cornerback last season. Woods joined Reggie Tongue and Donnie Edwards as Chiefs draft picks who will not be having an immediate effect soon.

Example two: Offensive tackle Trazelle Jenkins, the first pick for the Chiefs in 1995. The K.C. Wolf was on the playing field more than Jenkins was last season.

Example three: Only one of the past six first-round selections by the Chiefs have become really productive players in the NFL. Cornerback Dale Carter, a first round selection in 1992, has been the only one who has proved himself worthy of a first-round selection. If 1994 selection Greg Hill ever gets a chance to run the ball 30 times a game, he has a great possibility of doing so. But up until now, he's just been an average back.

1991 selection Harvey Williams and 1990 selection Percy Snow have had minor glimpses of greatness. But not nearly enough for a couple of first-round selections. Neither are with the organization anymore.

Other first-round busts for the Chiefs include: Paul Palmer (1987) and Ethan Horton (1985), and who can forget the selection of the great Todd Blackledge in 1983? Blackledge has commented on more completed passes than he ever threw in his short career.

In last year's draft, the first four picks for the Chiefs were defensive players. Coming into this year's draft, everyone knew where the Chiefs needed to improve - on the offense. They needed playmakers.

The result was six offensive players with six picks in the draft.

The Chiefs first-round selection, Tony Gonzalez, is a stud. The guy has big-play potential written all over him. He is quick off the line, has great down-the-field speed and has tremendous hands. There will not be too many linebackers who will be able to stay with Gonzalez over the middle. He will make Elvis Grbac and the Chiefs' passing offense better. But then again, the offense was already 10 times better when the Chiefs finally decided this off season that Steve Bono was not the sav-

What I liked most about the Chiefs firstround selection was the way they got it. They did not try to hide the fact they were going after Gonzalez. But just to make sure, King Carl and the boys traded up five spots to get him. They knew what they wanted, and they went after it. I like that aggressive style, one we are not used to seeing from the Chiefs.

I could go on and on about second-round selection Kevin Lockett. Lockett will be one of the steals of the draft. He reminds me a lot of ex-Steeler Lynn Swann. Lockett contains the same qualities as Swann: gracefulness, tremendous hands and an uncanny knack for coming up with the acrobatic catches.

The pick that interested me the most was the selection of quarterback Pat Barnes in the fourth round. I had Barnes, as did many publications, rated as the second-best quarterback behind Jim Druckenmiller.

Barnes is the prototype quarterback as far as size. He is 6'3" and weighs 215 pounds. Last season alone at California, he completed nearly 60 percent of his passes for 3,499 yards and 31 touchdowns. He is a great decision-maker, as seen in his touchdown to INT ratio (31:8). He is a quarterback who can stay in the pocket and throw the long ball accurately. In this year's Senior Bowl, he showed scouts he was tough as nails, too. Playing with a broken right wrist, Barnes tossed three touchdown passes to earn the game's most valuable player

While he is still unproven, he doesn't look like a Blackledge, Matt Blundin, Mike Elkins or Steve Matthews.

In five years, Barnes will either be starting for the Chiefs or another NFL team.

In the later rounds, the Chiefs grabbed offensive threats June Henley and Issac Byrd. Both are playmakers who have a shot at making the Chiefs squad. Both should at least provide stiff competition for Chiefs veterans. And with their last pick in the draft, the Chiefs addressed another area of need, the offensive line. With Stanford offensive tackle Nathan Parks, the Chiefs have a 6'5", 307pound lineman who can play the guard posi-

Even if he doesn't amount to much, he'll already be as productive as first-round selection Trazelle Jenkins.

Kinard breaks record; K-State has good showing at Kansas Relays

The return home for triple jumper Vanitta Kinard, a native of North Hollywood, Calif., proved to be a blessing indeed.

Kinard won the triple jump crown Sunday at the Mount San Antonio College Relays in Walnut, Calif., achieving another K-State school record and an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament along the way. Kinard's jump of 44'6" broke her previous best set at University of Texas-El Paso March 29.

"There was no doubt in my mind that she would perform well, K-State track coach Cliff Royelto said. "Her worst jump would have won the meet, and she continues to get better and better."

Senior Ed Broxterman finished fourth in the high jump with a jump of 7'1", and Wanita Dykstra placed eighth with a leap of 5'10-1/2", which earned her an NCAA provisional mark.

"Wanita jumped reasonably well considering the competition she was up against," Rovelto said. "And Ed missed a couple of attempts at 6'11" but jumped good for his first meet jumping."

Two former K-State track and field athletes also competed at the relays. Assistant coach Gwen Wentland took third in the high jump with a jump of 6'4-1/4". Nicole Green, who ran for Nike, finished second in the 400-meter run with a time of 53.03 sec-

On the men's side, the relay team of Chris May, Shawn Maxwell, Ryan Johnson and Ryan Clive-Smith won the medley relay with a time of 9:55.24. K-State fell 15 yards behind at the beginning of the anchor mile, but Clive-Smith ran a 4:11 mile and made up the difference.

The K-State track and field team is back in action Friday and Saturday. Select runners will compete in the Drake Relays, and the rest of the squad will compete in Oklahoma.

Lewis wins two relays at Mt. SAC

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WALNUT, Calif. - As he had first done 15 years earlier and many times since at the Mt. SAC Relays, Carl Lewis leaned across the finish line, then gradually slowed to a trot and raised his arms in triumph.

The 35-year-old Lewis, making the final Southern California appearance of his golden career, anchored the winning Santa Monica Track Club 400-meter relay team Sunday afternoon, then came back three hours later to run the 200-meter leg on the victorious sprint medley Nine-time Olympic gold medalist Lewis, Floyd Heard, Leroy Burrell and Mike Marsh were timed in 38.50 seconds in the 400 relay, with a team from Nigeria second in 39.01.

Lewis was far ahead on the final leg; the HS international team, which held a slight lead after 300 meters, was disqualified when anchor Gentry Bradley dropped the baton on the pass from Ato Boldon.

In the sprint medley relay, Lewis, who is making the 1997 season a sort of farewell tour leading up to his retirement, opened up a big lead on his leg and the Santa Monica track club won in 3:12.75, ahead of Texas Tech at 3:16.70.

"I can still run an anchor leg with any sprinter in the world. The last couple of weeks proved that," said Lewis, who ran a winning anchor leg in the Texas Relays recently against world record-holder and Olympic champion Donovan Bailey of Canada.

"I really wanted to run here because I've run here so many times in the past," Lewis added. "My right ankle has been bothering me, but I was hoping it would be fine for this weekend.

"I won't compete again until the Prefontaine (Invitational) in late May because I need to let my ankle rest. My conditioning is great. I'm physically better than I was last year.

Other highlights of the 39th annual Mt. SAC Relays came in the men's 100 meters, where 1992 Barcelona 200-meter gold medalist Michael Marsh ran a wind-aided 9.87 seconds, and the men's shot, with 1995 world champion and 1996 Olympic silver medalist John Godina winning with a mark of 69'1 1/2"

In the women's events, Melissa Morrison won the 100-meter hurdles in a meet record and lifetime best 12.86. Valeyta Althouse, a former UCLA standout, won the shot put with a mark of Pitching and hitting - they are the two fundamentals of

But for head coach Mike Clark and the K-State baseball team, those fundamentals have proposed somewhat of a problem in the

"We just need something to go right. We need something to go our way," Clark said. "We have to come through this and put ourselves in a position to win games."

For Clark, K-State's games have all too often shown the same outcome - great pitching outings but poor hitting, and vice

And those games simply state the obvious.

April 15, K-State was up against cross-state rival Kansas in a Starter Eric Yanz pitched a solid five innings, out-dueling KU

hurler Josh Wingerd. Yanz gave up just three hits in those innings and tallied eight strikeouts, and when he left the game, the Cats were ahead 1-0.

When Yanz departed in the fifth, so did K-State's lead and the eventual game, 5-4. Solid pitching, but poor hitting

In Sunday's contest with Texas Tech, K-State fell in a hole early as the Red Raiders bolstered out to a three-run first inning. K-State's pitching staff never really got back on track as the Cats used a total of five pitchers on the day. This time it was the offense that kept the Cats in the game, only to see the miracle run come to a screeching halt in the ninth with a 12-7 loss. When K-State takes the field against Baylor (26-19, 13-11) in a doubleheader at 3 p.m. today and a single game Wednesday at 2 p.m. at Ferrell Field in Waco, Texas, it will be looking to complete the package - connecting a solid pitching performance with outstanding play at the plate. "It comes down to the same thing, and that thing is, we can't put it together - good pitching and good hitting," Clark said. "Once we do that, I think we'll be in good shape.

Even pitching coach Mike Hensley reiterated Clark's statements, saying they were still looking for that one guy to step forward and take charge "I'm not going to head south on these guys," he said. "I have a great group of guys, and I've got some great arms. I just need that one guy who can step forward and go the distance for us." With just nine conference games left on the schedule, the Cats are looking into the distant future, hoping they are one of the top six teams in the conference to make it to the Big 12 Tournament. "We're trying to stress that the glass is half full, not half empty," Clark said. "We can still finish the season strong, and that's our problem - we haven't been strong of late." After the series with Baylor, K-State returns home for a doubleheader against Iowa State at noon Saturday at Frank Myers Field and a single game at 1 p.m. Sunday.

noon to discuss the proposal for a long water pipeline. The city water treatment plant and sewer system are expected to be flooded for weeks, and Bowen said the temporary hose or pipeline also could be used to speed up the process of restoring service once the flood ebbs. The city uses about 8 million gallons of water a day.

The hose, probably about 6 inches in diameter, would be made of a rubberlike material with enough flexibility to conform to the contour of the land, officials said.

However, there were no decisions yet on where the pipeline would be placed or even exactly where the water would

Across the river in East Grand Forks, Minn., Mayor Lynn Stauss said his city of 9,000 was "basically covered all the way."

"Some of the homes are floating off their foundations," he said.

Upstream at Fargo, N.D., however, the water was beginning to recede.

There have been minor problems with several dikes, "but for the most part, things are holding together," said Fargo Mayor Bruce Furness

North Dakota Gov. Ed Schafer said the cleanup alone would easily cost more than $40 million. And Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., said the cost of repairs could exceed $1 billion.

The river, moving slowly north across the extraordinarily flat terrain of the Red River Valley, was edging toward an expected crest at 54 feet, 26 feet above flood stage. By Monday afternoon, it had reached 53.9 feet, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

figuring out a budget before paying bills each month to pay bills at the end of the month, and that sinking feeling creeps into their stomachs. They grab a calculator and frantically balance their checkbooks, only to find they don't have enough money to pay the rent.

For some students, a budget is a good way to keep track of how much money is needed to pay

"Most students are living from hand to mouth," John Graham, adjunct professor of business, said

Graham said a budget can help students control money for expenditures and help them live within their means.

Lori Kieffer, sophomore in social work, said she doesn't have a budget because she isn't sure how to set one up.

"I've never taken the time to sit down and figre out how much I have." Kieffer said

Kieffer said she uses financial aid to pay for rent and tuition and her paycheck to pay for everything else.

She said that whenever she runs out of money for necessities, she either dips into her savings or asks her parents for money.

some money?" " Kieffer said. Graham said a budget can help students achieve short-term financial goals, such as paying off credit-card debt or saving for a new stere The first thing that needs to be done is to make list of all the money going out each month.

"The common things you would find in a budget would be the necessary things in life: food, shelter and clothing," Graham said.

Start by writing down all fixed expenses, such as rent.

Then list variable monthly expenses, such as utilities, phone bills, groceries and credit-card

Finally, write down all periodic expenses, such as car insurance, clothing and tuition. Now students should list the other things they

Students should include anything they spend money on. Look through old receipts and checks plan as well," Graham said. It might be a hule tough for students to save when living from paycheck to paycheck, but even tucking away $5 from each paycheck can help later on.

Once all of the expenses have been written lows write down all sources of income. These include paychecks, tips, financial aid and money from parents. Plasma donations also count.

The income area of the list should be bigger

If not, look to see if it's possible to reduce or get rid of any expenses. This could mean fewer pizzas, walking more to save gas or eating in more

Clipping coupons, buying generic products at the supermarket and avoiding impulse purchases

Once the budget is set up, the tough thing is applying it.

Students should try to build in an amount to spend each month however they choose. This way students won't go crazy because their budget won't allow them to spend money.

in speech. She will review the Imagine a warm summer evening. I'm dressed in a light, sleeveless cream sweater and floral-flower skirt. My brown sandals and pearl jewelry accessorize the cream ensemble pleasantly. I am dressed for my date.

First impressions are the worst.

On the contrary, my date strolls up on the sidewalk in stained jean shorts, a ragged T-shirt and a pair of tennis shoes. I had no idea he dressed with the intentions of going fishing.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not a shallow individual, and I actually enjoy fishing. But for a first date to a movie? I'm praying the movie is sold out.

Dressing for a date has to be one of the most difficult college events. What to wear, right, darlings? It all depends on where you are going, what you are doing and who you are with. These questions should be asked before the date, but don't make them obvious.

Of course, if you are quite familiar with your date, certain clothing styles can be optional, as well as easy to select.

Most of the time people are faced with first dates and blind dates not knowing what to wear. It never fails that on a first date someone always overdresses. Then the next time the other person overdresses. It usually takes about four dates to really grasp what is a good medium of clothing.

Now, I'm not saying that personal styles should be avoided. Clothing style expresses who and what we find important about ourselves. If you want to wear a halter top and a micro mini, that's just great. I'm sure your date won't mind. He's probably wearing the same thing.

Clothing should not be altered to fit someone else's preference. If you find yourself having to buy a new outfit every time you go out on a date, most likely something is wrong.

Sometimes people feel emotionally stronger with a new outfit. Friends' closets are great for this syndrome. You can borrow clothes for one night and return them without a receipt. This action can also give the illusion that your closet extends for miles. You never have to wear the same thing twice on a date. This way you keep your date wondering what you're going to

The key to an excellent date outfit is clothing that reflects something unknown or interesting about yourself. No, not your old football or volleyball jersey, but styles you can't find a dime a dozen. Keep in mind your heritage, hometown or a trip you've taken while searching for a date outfit. Wear clothes that tell a story. Clothing can be a great conversation starter. If things get a little quiet, your date always has the option of asking about an unusual belt, interesting earrings or a wild shirt you're wearing.

Sometimes he might just want to comment on how great you look, regardless of how great you come off. I'm sure your date would rather spend time with someone a little more fashionably interesting than someone who buys all Tommy Hilfiger clothes at Dillards. How original. Names don't impress me.

Here are some top 10 styles not to wear on a

6. A hat (unless needed, such as a beret for winter, or a ball cap for a baseball game). 5. Spandex.

Silver and gold jewelry mixture. 3. Anything that cuts off circulation, such as painted-on jeans.

2. Mickey Mouse propaganda. 1. Your mother's underwear.

With these ideas in mind, you're sure to have an exciting date. Just stay relaxed, and enjoy the evening. If the date goes successfully, you - not

In October, a judge in Baton Rouge, La., abruptly called a mistrial in the 8-year-old lawsuit filed by Mary Ann Turner, now 56, against ex-husband (and anesthesiologist) Alan Ostrowe, proclaiming that her testimony was overly theatrical.

According to Turner, when she was hospitalized for birthcanal surgery in 1972, Ostrowe, without her permission, persuaded the surgeons to remove her clitoral hood because, according to the couple's eldest son, his father needed to "control my mother's sexuality in order to compensate for his sexual Coleman said she wasn't surprised when she found out he was being sent overseas, but she said the sooner he gets back the better.

"It is nothing new to the family. I don't think you get used to it no matter how many times it happens," she said.

While her husband has been gone, she said she has maintained her daily activities, but has cleared time to help other wives.

She said she organizes time when the wives of other soldiers can get together and socialize.

"This is really good for the younger wives that don't have children," Coleman said.

Coleman said her daughters understand why their father is gone. Her 10year-old is studying about Bosnia in school and her 4-year-old likes to send letters to her father.

"If I forget, she reminds me," she

John Wright, rear detachment commander of the 1st Battalion 41st Infantry, said it takes a while to get ready for the mission, which is to help peacekeeping efforts.

Wright said the morale among the troops is good and the mission has been going as planned.

"The soldiers are honored to be selected to participate in a United States peace mission," he said. "They are excited to be doing a real-world mission in such a critical area of the world." Wright said deployment is sched-plan, he said the troops should come home by late September or early Oc-

Red Cross collects, sends packages to troops in Bosnia

Hard candy, gum, drink mixes and writing supplies mean the world to the troops in Bosnia.

The American Red Cross has organized an effort to send care packages to the troops stationed in two main areas - Hungary and

"Hungary is a staging area. It is just one of the areas where we have people coming in and out. Some of the people are there for short, and some are there for the long term," said Steve Cox, station manager for the Fort Riley chapter of Red Cross.

He said the Red Cross volunteers gives the packages to all of the soldiers. When the packages reach the staging areas, volunteers take them and distribute

"It doesn't matter where a soldier is, we will find them," he

People can send many different items. Iced tea, lemonade, playing cards and reading materials are important. Writing paper with envelopes is at a premium.

"We can never get enough," Cox said.

This is not the first time the Red Cross has done this and found there is need for these Cox said the Red Cross officials have found that the soldiers appreciate the items.

"It shows that someone is thinking about them. It may not matter that much, but it is a big morale booster. There are 1,000 soldiers from Fort Riley. That is where the deployment really hits home," he said.

Cox said he has been deployed before and it really brightens the day to see that someone has taken the time to send something.

"I would like to stress that size or cost doesn't matter. Just the fact that people care," he said.

America suffered a significant depression every 30 years before Roosevelt. However, America has yet to experience a significant economic downfall since he introduced the New Deal more than 50 years ago. The New Deal redesigned the economy and created a framework for the prolonged economic expansion that followed World War II, Schlesinger said.

Schlesinger said Roosevelt's greatest accomplishment while in office was his decision to end World War II. People, now looking back, assume that the outcome of the war was predestined," he said. "It wasn't." Schlesinger said Roosevelt was just as political in war as in peace. 'He perfectly understood that there could be no better way than the pursuit of political objectives in war time and the claim of total destruction in winning the war," he said. "He moved methodically to prepare the American people for a continuing international role. Most important of all in Roosevelt's view was America's participation in the permanent international organization."

While stationed in Paris for the U.S. Army, Schlesinger said he remembers picking up a newspaper as he entered a subway April 12, 1945, and glancing at the front page. A bold headline disclosed Roosevelt's death.

"Standing in uniform, I was surrounded by men and women - many of them in tears - expressing their deep appreciation for the dead president," he said.

Peruvian hostage crisis ends

► SOLDIERS STORM mansion; rebels, one hostage killed.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIMA, Peru - In a lightning assault, Peruvian troops stormed the Japanese ambassador's mansion Tuesday and rescued 71 hostages kept for four months, killing all 14 rebel captors as the unsuspecting guerrillas reportedly played soccer.

One captive, Supreme Court Justice Carlos Giusti, and two soldiers also died, President Alberto Fujimori said. Some hostages were secretly warned just before the raid, one of the freed men said.

Fujimori said 25 other captives were injured in the gunfire and explosions that rocked the compound, only two seriously - Peru's foreign minister, Francisco Tudela, and another Supreme Court justice, both suffering gunshot wounds

"I didn't waver for a single minute in giving the order for this rescue operation," said the president, who throughout the crisis adamantly rejected the guerrillas' demand that jailed comrades be freed in exchange for the captive diplomats and business executives.

The operation ended an international ordeal that had transfixed two nations and focused global attention on a little-known leftist rebel group, Tupac Amaru, which has waged guerrilla war here since Edith Gonzalez a woman on the scene 1984.

In Tokyo, Japan's prime minister called it a splendid rescue, but also said it was regrettable that Peru had not forewarned his government of the surprise, broad-daylight attack.

Fujimori told reporters late Tuesday that intelligence information convinced him it was an ideal time to end the impasse by force.

He apparently was referring to word of the indoor soccer game. Bolivian Ambassador Jorge Gumucio, one of the freed hostages, said eight hostage-holders were playing soccer in the main hall of the diplomatic residence when the security forces struck, first setting off an explosion in a tunnel directly under

It was about 3:30 p.m. The 140-man military-police assault team poured through the compound's front gate, then blasted open the mansion's front door. Others attacked from the rear, and a third unit climbed to the rooftop and shepherded hostages down.

It ended quickly. As smoke billowed over the residence, triumphant soldiers hauled down the guerrillas' flag, and ex-hostages and rescuers cheered and jubilantly sang the Peruvian national anthem. A large pool of blood could be seen at the bottom of a stairway.

Fujimori said all 14 rebels were killed. They included the group's leader, Nestor Cerpa and at least two teen-age girls. Gumucio said Cerpa was one of

Remembering strength

- AUTHOR PAINTS A picture of the Roosevelt couple, term.

Pulitzer-Prize winner Doris Kearns Goodwin concluded the Franklin D. Roosevelt Symposium Tuesday afternoon in McCain Auditorium with the 109th Landon Lecture, calling his term in office one of contagious strength for America.

Offering a perspective unlike any given during the symposium, Goodwin painted a portrait of the former first couple for the audience, which she depicted in her prize-winning book, "No Ordinary Time: Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt: The Home Front in World War II."

Goodwin's interest in presidents can be contributed to when she was an assistant to President Lyndon Johnson at age 24.

Goodwin's inspiration to write stemmed from a comment Johnson made to her (D. SCOTT FRITCHEN) one day when he said he was reading a book on President Lincoln and he couldn't "feel him." "I believe the real challenge in history is somehow to resist the tendencies so prevalent today, the tendency to label and stereotype, but instead, to bring compliments and empathy to our subjects so that the gods can truly come alive even if it is just for a few moments - in all of its ► HISTORIANS REFLECT BACK On Roosevelt's medical condition.

Arthur Schlesinger Jr. explained to an audi-ence Tuesday morning in the K-State Student Union how sick Franklin Delano Roosevelt was during the Yalta summit of February 1945 - or rather how sick he must have been. At the time, no one could tell, he said.

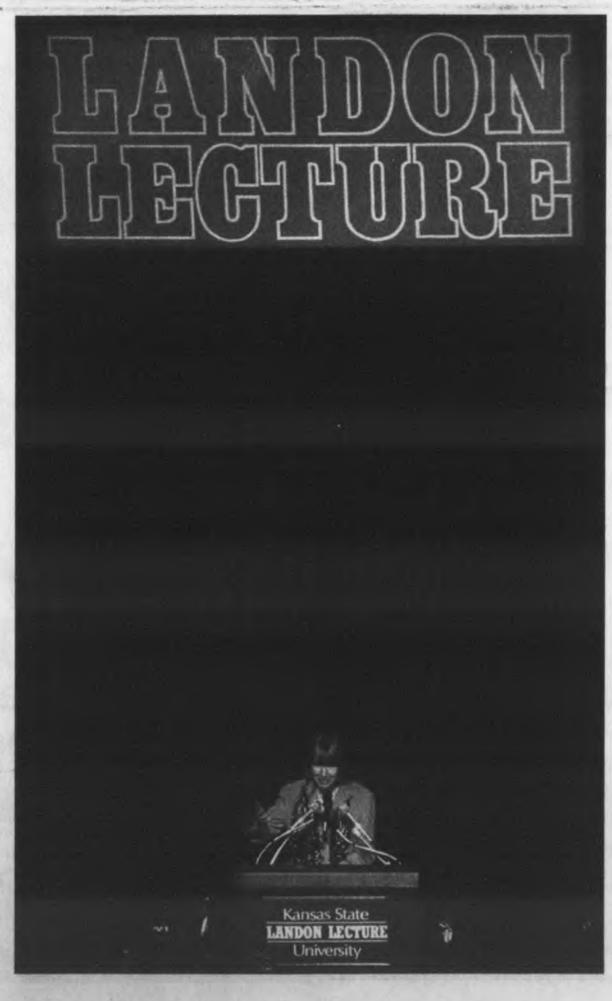

"He was clearly a dying man," Schlesinger said of Roosevelt during the conference between Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, and Josef Stalin, on the post-World War II reconstruction of Europe

"It wasn't clear at the time, but looking back at the medical records, we see his horrible blood pressure, his failing heart, how weak he must have been

"Except that I find no evidence that the sickness impaired his decisions," he said.

Schlesinger joined a panel of JOHN HENDERSON three other historians who recalled their collective knowledge of Roosevelt to an audience of about 150 in the Union Forum Hall. Ralph Titus, former manager of KKSU-AM 580, was moderator.

• STATE WILL SEEK DEATH PENALTY IN SOLOMON KILLINGS.

ABILENE - The state has confirmed will seek the death penalty against Robert Verge, one of two Missourians accused of killing a Dickinson County couple at their rural home.

Verge, 23, of Kansas City, Kan., was arraigned Monday in Dickinson County District Court

He stood mute when asked how he pleaded, and Judge David Platt ordered that innocent pleas be entered on his behalf.

Verge and Virgil S. Bradford, 26, also of Kansas City, Kan., are accused of killing Kyle and Chrystine Moore at their home near Solomon on Feb. 17.

The two men were indicted by a Dickinson County grand jury on two counts of capital murder, as well as aggravated burglary, aggravated robbery and theft.

Bradford remains in jail in Kansas City, Kan., awaiting resolution of charges in an unrelated case Verge appeared in Dickinson County District Court with his appointed attorneys, Richard Ney and Bradley Sylvester, both of Wichita.

Ney waived formal reading of the charges and said his client would stand mute to preserve his ability to attack the indictments at a future time.

Platt postponed setting a date for Verge's trial, but he will hear arguments on pretrial motions May 14.

• TRIAL FOR ATTEMPTED MURDER, KIDNAPPING SET FOR JULY 7.

The preliminary trial for Justin Ray DeMoss is scheduled for July 7.

DeMoss, freshman in sociology, was arrested under suspicion for the attempted kidnapping and attempted murder of his ex-figncée

His preliminary trial has been set for July 7, Barry Wilkerson, DeMoss' attorney said. DeMoss is still in the Riley County Jail

The Kansas State University Council on Parking Operations will conduct a public hearing from 3 to 5 p.m., Thursday, April 24 in the Student Union Big 12 Room. The hearing provides the opportunity for discussion of the proposed changes to the regulations governing traffic and parking on the roads, streets, driveways and parking facilities at Kansas State University. The following is a summary of the substance of the rules and proposed changes:

General: The regulations were completely revised to reduce excess verbiage and duplication of procedures. The new regulations have been rewritten to improve clarity, to reduce multiple interpretations, and to include a table of contents. Since the program to reduce reserved stalls started approximately three years ago, the number of nonmedical reserved stalls has dropped approximately 16 percent.

- 1) Section II B, Permit Fee Schedule. Reserved stall cost will increase $100 per stall per year.
- 2) Section A. 2. Lot designation has changed so that permit information will coincide with parking lot sign information.
- 3) Section II. F. 2. e. Frequent visitor has been redefined as an individual who requires parking on campus in excess of one calendar day per week.
- 4) Section II. H. Individuals who are displaying forged, stolen or altered parking permits in their vehicles may lose their campus parking privileges for up to one year.
- 5) Section V. B. 23. The fine for illegally displaying a stolen, altered, expired or unauthorized accessible parking identification device is $100.
- 6) Section V. C. 4. An excessive violator has been defined to include an individual who has five or more unpaid parking citations.

This hearing is being held to discuss the above proposed changes only. This is not an open forum to discuss parking issues in general. Your attendance and participation are encouraged.

New city commissioner focuses on tax rates, economic development

Read Thursday's and Friday's Collegian for interviews involving Karen McCulloh and Ed Klimek.

Newly elected City Commissioner Roger Reitz was able to relax a little as he began working with his colleagues, Karen McCulloh and Ed Klimek. It seems the trio shares a bond that could prove useful when the commission is faced with tough decisions.

"We're all left-handed," Reitz said. "We may have more of a consensus feeling about ourselves than we realize."

A consensus might not be imperative, but a definite majority will be needed to resolve the issue regarding the closing of Laramic Street, Reitz said.

Reitz said he has heard from many upset members of the business district in Aggieville.

He concurred with the business owners, saying the loss of traffic would be harmful to sales.

His other concern with Laramie is that Manhattan Christian College does not possess the funds to complete the project it has proposed.

"The money isn't in hand right now," Reitz said. "If we make this possible by closing the street he (Ken Cable, MCC president) might use that as a fulcrum to others to try and get money from them to 1998. Reitz said Manhattan already has donate to make the thing go."

As for the expansion project planned for Anderson Avenue, Reitz said he was surprised the plan had come to fruition.

However, Reitz went on to say he feels there is no other alternative to resolving the traffic problem in the area, especially because Laramie and Fairchild streets are already congested.

"We have to use Anderson to its fullest extent," Reitz said, "It is the main artery to campus."

The Anderson project will result in a half-cent increase in sales tax, starting in one of the highest sales-tax rates in the

Although he sees economic development as a goal, he says is aware of the emotions surrounding taxes.

"There's a lot of people very unsettled about it," he said. "Coming close to increasing taxes is a real sticky wicket for a lot of people."

Reitz understands such concerns of the Manhattan community, having lived here for 63 years. During that time, he attended K-State, where he received his bachelor's degree in pre-medicine in

He went on to marry his college sweetheart while in medical school. The couple has five children, all of whom have attended K-State. "My feeling about K-State is to be very sympathetic to their requests," Reitz

Reitz said the friendly nature of all persons affiliated with the University was a great source of pride to him. "My dad used to say that there are many other states as nice as ours, but we have K-State," he said, "I don't know a bad K-Stater.

Center for Aging mixes teaching with research

But for professor Lyn Norris-Baker, director of K-State's Center for Aging, nothing can be further from the truth.

"It really reflects that this is a good center," Norris-Baker said. According to the association, specialization in certain categories makes individuals eligible

"They don't just pick on one particular area," Norris-Baker said. "I've been involved in providing leadership for the center and have certainly been involved in the teaching of gerontology." K-State's Center for Aging was established in 1975. It was one of the first such centers to bring people together to consider issues in a multidisciplinary way, Norris-Baker said.

Today, the center focuses on three areas: research, teaching and service.

K-State conducts basic research on the aging process with emphasis on the social, economic, psychological and environmental factors related to the elderly and their lifestyles.

Norris-Baker was named director of the center in 1992, after 10 years of teaching architecture at K-State, something she still does. She received her undergraduate degree from Rice University and her master's and doctorate from the University of Houston.

One of the main points of emphasis for Norris-Baker and others involved in the center when she took over was

"Our mission has always been to focus equally on those three areas, but sometimes, you pay more attention to one part than the other," Norris-Baker said. "But these things are synergistic and all work together.

"This center has always had a strong educational tradition and our strongest tradition has been in teaching. There had been some research going on, but one of the challenges given to me was to facilitate more research.

We have sustained and maintained quality in our teaching and have tried to enhance the research," she said.

Striving for a multidisciplinary view of things, Norris-Baker said, is an important step in the process of getting other K-State departments involved.

"The two things that the faculty associate with gerontology have always strongly believed in is that aging needs to be studied in a multidisciplinary way and needs to involve people from different backgrounds and colleges," Norris-

The amount of research the center is able to conduct helps the teaching area. More research equals more knowledge.

BFA art show exhibits diversity of artistic talent

here's a quiet revolution going on this semester in Willard

Like never before in the past four years, graduating bachelor's of fine arts students are fueling an artistic fire that has produced excellent student art shows.

The shows, in the Willard Gallery on the first floor of the south wing, last for one week only. So, when you're enrolling for fall semester or going through

EDITORIAL BOARD drop/add, stop by and visit a show.

The gallery is informal, and no one minds if you drop in unannounced. Professors can even take their classes to the gallery without making any arrangements. Gallery hours are from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through

What you'll find inside the gallery might surprise you. It's common for BFA shows to lack feeling and for the artists to be passionless about their work. Not so this spring.

Every show in the gallery this semester has pulsed with conviction, vision and direction. The students have proven their consistency and pure artistry with original works that can be both thought-provoking and reassuring. These students, who have blossomed into artists, deserve a warm congratulations for their contributions to campus culture.

Political, formal, ideological and social issues have all found a place in these student works. While nothing is done solely to upset or provoke, you will be hard-pressed not to find something on which to comment.

Furthermore, students have used the gallery space in new ways, finding structure and cohesion in the relatively young gallery.

> It wasn't too long ago the Willard Gallery looked like a make-shift chemistry lab. Now, with much credit to the Department of Art, it's almost been fully transformed into the best student gallery on campus.

> If you think you're learning anything at K-State, you haven't truly begun your education until you've seen what the students in Willard have created

> Each week is a new show and a new, vital take on life. Make the most of yours.

I JUST HAD MAJOR SURGERY

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senio (rmf@ksu.edu).

There's something about the change from 1999 to 2000 that scares people

It's not a feeling of panic or Stephen King horror, but a much more subtle version of scary that is more confusing and awkward. It's an unassuring feeling that is so brilliantly conveyed in "The X-Files" on television. Who controls existence? Can a man-made calendar date be so important?

This same unnerving, omnipresent sense permeates most of high culture as artists and such try to make something of the approaching millennium. Although, this is too much; too fake. Any artist, writer or architect who proclaims their work anticipates the confusion of the millennium is already irrelevant.

It's not the elite cultural forces that are metaphorizing the turn of the millennial clock into self- and group-expression. Rather, it's the underlying joke of it all - the level of stupidity embraced by people in countries whose supreme wish is for Americanization. It can be found in the little daily consumer rituals that have become tantamount to existence. A "whitenoise," as novelist Don DeLillo has

He writes in his 1985 book, of the same name, that "once you're out of school, it is only a matter of time before you experience the vast loneliness and dissatisfaction of consumers who have lost their group identity.'

As pop culture hobbyists, many of my friends and I have already experienced this leap to consumer unimpor-

When we say to ourselves "this is made for 13-year-

DeLillo speaks more of how modern generations splinter into racial, income and geographic sub-groups. Difference, however difficult in America, is not a new

But how many of us still feel a sense of alienation? College experiences only serve to heighten this experience.

Over the course of four years, we watch countless friends and acquaintances move on to good and bad careers, heartbreak, happiness, home and nothing. And when they are gone, we sit in the wings waiting for our entrance, still unsure of our lines.

Although there is surely no cure for confusion that roots itself in the soul, a bit of thinking can improve matters. Sitting on your bed, staring out a window or at nothing at all and thinking. Or just standing in your apartment with your arms folded looking across your motley collection of

How many of us stop and consider ourselves? Perhaps it's too selfish or we don't have enough time. Would we get married as early if we had thought more? Would we really have taken that job in Kansas City?

As summer approaches, I find myself struggling with nothing and everything. Where do I work, visit, travel, write, draw, live? It's the style of confusion that is paradoxical in that I've got everything to do and worry over, but I choose to do nothing.

It's not procrastination, but pure confusion being mentally overwhelmed with challenges and decisions and choosing a state of confusion over burnout.

And this confusion is as stressful as committing to finishing the paper, project or assignment.

Our generation has been sold short by educators and parents who consider us procrastinators, but never question why we procrastinate. Oh, yes, I put off work and projects so I can stay up for 72 hours straight working on them. How stupid does this sound?

I don't know why I procrastinate. I can't explain why I would rather lay on my couch - not sleeping - with CNN on in the background and think about survival. Or how I would live if I had a choice and limitless funds. Or why I still live in Kansas.

And to escape this confusion, we seek out pathetic tasks easily solved to reinforce our self esteem.

We shop for that white oxford shirt we "need;" we eat that new southwestern burger with honey-ranch sauce that is so exciting. And, we watch a sitcom-as-movie starring the flavor-of-the-minute. Some of us, on the other hand, pursue more cultural interests, such as art and jazz, but it's only another means to the same end.

All of this in the name of a diversion from our self to a collective, shared experience.

Marriage or intimate companionship is the ultimate conformity to partially escape the confusion. We humans find we need someone to help (us).

If we do so desperately need each other, why am I sitting frozen, staring at a parking lot outside my window?

What has totally astounded me is the amount of reaction I have gotten from all kinds of people about my choice to not shave my legs. I had no idea how important it is to some people, especially men, that a woman shave her legs. Some men seem to be repulsed by the sight of hair on a woman's legs.

Granted, I don't have just the two- or three-day stubble. I haven't shaved in a number of months, so my leg hair is long, cute and curly. It's not really dark hair, but you can see it from a reasonable distance. I have been known to rub the hair on my legs while bored, in much the same way someone plays with the hair on their head or a man plays with his mustache or beard.

I know there are more than a few men and some women who cringed while reading that paragraph. Just the thought of a woman with hair on her legs is making you uncomfort-

Recollections, personal stories spin around FDR's life, accomplishments

The second day of "The Legacy of FDR: A Roosevelt Symposium" included a panel discussion between former Sen. Nancy Kassebaum Baker, Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. and William E. Leuchtenburg Tuesday morning in Union Forum Hall.

The symposium preceded the dedication of the Roosevelt Memorial in Washington, D.C., scheduled for the first week in May.

The discussion centered around the panel's recollections of Roosevelt and the time period in which he lived. Panel members shared personal stories and recollections while about 200 audience members laughed at their candid humor.

Kassebaum Baker spoke about the relationship between her father, Alf Landon, a former Kansas governor, and Roosevelt and her personal recollections growing up in that time period. She also discussed her father's role in international affairs, even though Landon had only traveled abroad once.

"Dad always said that if you read history then you didn't need to travel abroad," Kassebaum Baker said.

Schlesinger acknowledged that Roosevelt didn't like two of his four opponents for the presidency, but he respected Landon and Wendell Wilkie. the other two candidates.

Kassebaum Baker said she remembered when Roosevelt offered her father a position as the secretary of war.

Landon, a Republican, realized Roosevelt was trying to construct a bipartisan cabinet so he could gain more support for the rising threat of war. 'My father believed that it was important to have a loyal opposition," Kassebaum Baker said. Landon later turned down the position. Leuchtenburg compared the friendly rivalry between Roosevelt and Landon to that of Thomas Jefferson and John war deserves only sympathy. "They were simply trying to live their lives with the best possible mixture of affection and the effect of work, love and friendship," she said. Roosevelt's confidence, Goodwin said, grew through his transforming experience of paralysis. She said it was a confidence so deep that it survived the most terrible days of the war, one that allowed him to go to sleep immediately after hitting the pillow each night, knowing he had made the right decisions.

"If I had to choose one quality above all others that was most important in shaping Roosevelt's leadership, it would be his absolute confidence in himself, his country and his democratic system of government," she said.

Roosevelt was also widely known for his fireside chats. These speeches transmitted throughout the country, filled the streets with the music of presidency and leadership, she said.

"America could feel the sense of extreme history," she said.

However, Goodwin's perspective into the White House while aiding Johnson added a twist to her biography that is unparalleled to other books on Roosevelt.

Goodwin said she was most intrigued by the conversations the many live-ins and visitors, including the Princess of Norway, must have had during their stay in the White House while Roosevelt was in office. She said at the time while constructing her book, she wanted to know what room Roosevelt lived in.

By invitation of Hillary Clinton, Goodwin stayed in the White House overnight where she said President Clinton helped her search for Roosevelt's room.

Goodwin shared insight of Roosevelt's cocktail hour, where men weren't allowed to discuss politics; poker playing; and his 10-day fishing trips - all unimaginable today, she said.

However, Goodwin disclosed revealing discoveries surrounding the first couple, adding another twist to the Roosevelt story.

"All of their differences forged their historic partnership. A partnership that was all the more remarkable because of Eleanor's discovery in 1918 that Franklin was having an affair with another woman," she said.

Goodwin said three-fourths of the time in constructing the book was dedicated to interviewing 80 of the Roosevelts' friends. However, she said writing descriptively takes time.

"If you want to give those details that hopefully can make a person think they were in the room with somebody, you got to know what the room looked like and what they were wearing. It's for creating an atmosphere. It actually took me longer to write the book about World War II than it took for the war to be fought," she said.

Goodwin said she was honored to be a speaker for the Roosevelt symposium.

"It's an extraordinary gathering of people. These are the historians who were my heroes when I was young and in graduate school.

When I first entered the desire to do a book on Roosevelt, I went to them to see if they thought there could be another book on Roosevelt and they were so generous and so warm-hearted.

They gave me advice and mentored me. Just to be back with them today means a lot."

Doris Kearns Goodwin, whose book on Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt won a 1995 Pulitzer Prize, characterized Roosevelt as a man who had suffered polio and supposedly conquered it.

"He was a paraplegic, yet we say he conquered it," she said. The audience broke into chuckles.

The idea that a man crippled by disease could hold so much respect and admiration was one of the things that makes Roosevelt so interesting as a subject for history, she said.

William E. Leuchtenburg went so far as to raise the doubt as to whether Roosevelt was really so frail, due to the number of people around who failed to recognize the state of the president's

"It was reported that when he went on retreat for his last few days in Warm Springs, Ga., there was a warm glow in his cheeks," he said. "He had his good days and bad days."

Leuchtenburg admitted the ironic idea of conquering polio was typical of those who had survived the disease, creating an optimism that helped them go

The miracle was how fond the public was of his presidency, she said. "He never thought beyond him," she said. "He didn't want to think of anyone being president after him."

That attitude prevented Harry Truman from learning key information that Roosevelt could have told him before his death, that might have made the later president's job easier, she said.

Kenneth Davis, honorary chairman of the symposium committee, declined most of the dialogue, offering support for the other panelists here and there.

Michael Donnelly, associate professor of English at K-State and chair of the Distinguished Lecture Series, lauded the symposium in his opening, remarking in rapid-fire prose how fortunate K-State was to have a panel whose combined experience amounted to nearly 200

"Like the proverb says, 'Aim your arrow at the moon, it will travel farther than if you aim for a lower but attainable goal," he said, expressing the hope that future meetings of such great minds are in store for K-State.

NCAA reinstates college basketball's 5-second rule

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Hoping to jazz up offensive play, the NCAA decided Tuesday to reinstate college basketball's five-second rule, which was dropped four seasons ago.

According to the rule, an offensive player cannnot dribble the ball more than five seconds if a defender is staying within six feet of him. The offensive player must shoot, pass or turn the ball over.

After the rule was abandoned, the number of shots declined, as guards protecting a lead would dribble around for most of the 35 seconds on the shot clock.

"The concern has been that the flow of the game hasn't been as good and the game doesn't look as good," said Larry Keating, chairman of the men's basketball rules committee.

"The group felt pretty strongly this was one of the reasons why," Keating said. "By putting it back in, we hope to get teams more into an offensive flow rather than having one player dominate up front."

In a two-day meeting ending Tuesday, the committee also voted to require most preseason tournaments next year to use a 40-second shot clock, instead of a 35-second shot clock.

This will be mandatory for most preseason tournaments that begin before Dec. 1, including the Maui Classic, the Great Alaska Shootout and the preseason NIT.

"Coaches very strongly support putting the five-second count back in, but not all are in support of changing the clock," Keating said. "Most felt strongly that the five-second count was more of the culprit. But we put a 40-second clock in to see what happens.'

If successful, the 40-second shot clock could become permanent for the 1998-99 season.

In other action, the committee voted to:

· Allow conferences to experiment with changing the held-ball rule, making it an automatic turnover instead of awarding alternate possession. This will be strictly up to the conferences whether to try or not.

· Let coaches, not just players, call time out. · Allow substitutions during multiple free throws only before the final attempt or after the final attempt.

· Enforce more aggressively the coaches' box

The committee also voted to let conferences experiment with having a maximum of five players on the free-throw lanes during foul shots. In the preseason tournaments, this will be mandatory.

Decreasing the number on the lanes from nine to five should clean up a lot of the pushing and shoving going on, Keating said.

According to the held-ball rule, when a defensive player ties up the ball with an offensive player, possession is awarded according to an alternating possession arrow.

"There is opinion among the coaches that that is not fair, that maybe it should be a turnover," Keating said. "We're going to put that in for any conference that wants to try it.

Beginning next year, technical fouls called for crowd behavior such as throwing debris onto the court will be counted as administrative fouls, not coach's fouls

"Making it a coach's technical was unfair, and it probably caused some officials not to call it because it was so unfair," Keating said.

But leaving the coach's box near the team bench will be more likely to draw penalties.

"We've always had a system ... where coaches might step out three or four times before anything was done," Keating said. "Now we're telling officials be sure you go over to the coach and warn him. The message to coaches is stay in

This year filling the job of the all-time Big 8 receiving leader will not be an easy task but there are a number of newcomers on the spring depth chart.

Senior Andre Anderson leads the group of potential starters in the spring thus far. Anderson moved from running back in 1996 to catch 23 passes for 309 yards and five touchdowns Not far behind him on the two-deep chart is transfer

DeAndrea Robinson, a red shirt last season. Robinson played as a true freshman as a receiver at Southern Methodist University. Robinson played in nine games for the Mustangs, catching 12 passes for

> At 5'7", 150-pounds, Robinson is the smallest receiver on the charts, but that hasn't deterred him from finding his place in the starting lineup come August.

> "I'm getting to learn the offense, and it's tougher than most systems," Robinson said. "It's a lot more complex, but once you get it down it's like math.

> In his red shirt season last year, Robinson won the Red Raider Awards for his outstanding work on the Wildcat scout team. Robinson said he was devoted to making every aspect of his game better and better each day. "I learn something new every day," he said. "I'll just work hard and let time take care of itself. If I start, I start and if I don't, I don't."

Junior Troy Hackney started spring drills as the No. 1 receiver, but has been flanked by a number of players. Last season Hackney caught K-State's longest pass play of the regular season when he hauled in a 57-yard touchdown pass from Jonathan Beasley against Indiana State. Hackney averaged 14.2 yards per reception in five games.

Another transfer who has even bigger shoes to fill in the off-season is community college standout Everett Burnett, who was given Lockett's jersey number of 83.

"I definitely have some big shoes to fill because they gave me his jersey number," Burnett said. "I have a lot to work on because everyone will have their eyes on that number when I come into the game.'

Burnett has also gained experience from Lockett himself. Burnett said he had helped him in the past with different routs and the overall system at K-State.

"When he helped me out that really gave me a lot of confidence. It's hard enough having to live up to his play at K-State, but he helped me out," Burnett said.

Burnett, a junior transfer from Kemper Military Community College in St. Louis, Mo., said he was excited about the opportunities here at K-State - something he was not offered at community college

"At Kemper, I wasn't able to get much time because I struggled in high school," Burnett said. "The junior-college game is a lot different, but at K-State there are a lot

Japanese pitcher fulfills life's dream by joining Yankees

SAN DIEGO - Next stop for the Hideki Irabu saga — the Bronx.

The San Diego Padres ended their festering, three-month association with the star Japanese right-hander on Tuesday by selling his negotiating rights to the New York Yankees for $3 million. Irabu, 27, whose fastball has been clocked at 100 mph, is expected to command a multimillion-dollar signing bonus.

Irabu has said it was his boyhood dream to pitch for the Yankees. If and when he makes it to the majors, Irabu would become the third Japanese pitcher on an active roster, joining Hideo Nomo of the Los Angeles Dodgers and Shigetoshi Hasegawa of the Anaheim Angels.

As part of the deal, which is subject to approval from the ruling executive council, the Yankees will send injured outfielder Ruben Rivera and minorleague pitcher Rafael Medina to San Diego in return for three minor-leaguers: second baseman Homer Bush and outfielders Gordon Amerson and Vernon Maxwell.

Because Maxwell was picked in the 1996 amateur draft, he can't be sent to the Yankees until June.

The deal was not announced, but a source familiar with the negotiations, speaking on the condition he not be identified, told the Associated Press it had been completed. Padres general manager Kevin Towers and president Larry Lucchino wouldn't comment.

The Yankees and Irabu still have to work out a contract. The Padres and Irabu's former team in Japan, the Chiba Lotte Marines, have informally accused New York of tampering and discussing parameters of a contract with Irabu before the trade.

However, Chiba Lotte general manager Mitsumasa Mitsuno told Kyodo News the Marines would approve negotiations between the Yankees and Irabu. He said the Marines have yet to be informed about the deal.

Why all the fuss about Irabu? He was 12-6 with a 2,40 ERA last year, leading the Pacific League in ERA for the second straight season. He has been compared with Nolan Ryan because of his 1,111 strikeouts in 1,101 2-3 innings in nearly nine full seasons. He had 645 during the past three seasons.

New York Mets manager Bobby Valentine, who managed the Marines in 1995, said Irabu is one of the 10 best pitchers in the world.

The Padres obtained Irabu's exclusive negotiating rights in January when they reached a working arrangement with Chiba Lotte. But soon after, Irabu announced he had no intention of negotiating with the Padres and wanted to sign with the Yankees.

George Yankees owner Steinbrenner and the Major League Baseball Players Association wanted Irabu declared a free agent so any team could make an offer. But the executive council ruled Feb. 27 that his rights belonged to San Diego.

Irabu's lawyer, Jean Afterman, called that decision legally, morally and ethically wrong. One week later, his Los Angeles-based agent, Don Nomura, likened Irabu's situation to being in a World War II internment Irabu, who was two seasons short of the amount needed for free agency in Japan, had threatened to sit out 1997 unless he was allowed to sign with the Yankees. He even considered playing in an independent league in Canada to stay in shape.

When the Padres hadn't traded his rights to the Yankees by Irabu's selfimposed deadline of March 18, the pitcher left Los Angeles, where he had

State track coaches have competed in track meets in the past, but we haven't seen head coach Cliff Rovelto on the track Throwers coach Steve Fritz recently competed in the decathlon at the Kansas

Relays and even won it in considerable fashion breaking a KU Relays record along the way. Middle-distance runners coach Jill Lancaster competed in a couple of events last semester at the USA Indoor Championships in Ahearn Field House. Last Saturday and Sunday, runners coach Gwen Wentland competed in the Mount San Antonio College Relays along with Nicole Green. I even recall distance coach Terry Drake running a 400 meter in Ahearn at a practice this semester trying to beat a time set by his students. But where's Rovelto?

I recently asked him of his disappearance when it comes to competition in any sort of track meet, and he wasn't shy in saying he would never compete.

There is an absolute zero chance of that happening," Rovelto said. At least we know he isn't shunning it because he's out of shape.

"Well that's the whole reason I'm not going to do that," he said. "I'm so out of shape it's not funny. Well, I hope before too long we can at

I was proven wrong on Sunday when I focused my eye on shortstop Heath Schesser. Twice in the game, Schesser slid into first base after hitting little dribblers in the Pierce's whole focus is on why Woods, who is the proclaimed next messiah in the sports world, cannot be and should not be considered a messiah in any account. Pierce becomes the argument of his own scorn by telling distasteful, off-the-wall jokes about Jesus and Saint Peter and continues to weave this into his somewhat savage opinion piece.

I didn't like the way it was presented, and I think Pierce did a poor job of relaying to the reader the intent of his article. But if you get a chance, go check it out.

· Here we are at the end of the NBA season and as I predicted way back when, Allen Iverson still looks to be the favorite for Rookie of the Year honors.

Visiting comedian from Alabama pokes fun at politics, deer hunting and college with a taste of

REDNECK HUMOR

SANDY DAVIS

Comedian Vic Henley entertained a crowd of about 100 people Tuesday night in Union Station.

Henley, a native of Oxford, Ala., cowrote "Games Rednecks Play" with Jeff Foxworthy and has appeared on "The Tonight Show."

Henley's stand-up comedy routine poked fun at the Atlanta Olympics, politics, rednecks, deer hunting and college, as well as a few choice pokes at various audience members. Many of his jokes contained sexual material.

He also talked about some observations he had made while traveling through Kansas.

"This is Manhattan on a Tuesday night?" Henley asked. "White people and little babies?"

Review

Henley easily got the crowd into his act by choosing people out of the audience to talk to and make fun of

Once he snagged their attention, he was able to keep it for his hour-long show.

Henley discussed being a Southerner from a small town moving to a big city and the taunts he gets about his accent.

He said it was funny that people from New York make fun of a Southern accent, when they have an amusing accent all their own.

"I live in New York. Can you see that? Goober takes the Big Apple," Henley said.

Henley also took a few minutes to discuss college sports, as he pondered the differences between basketball at the University of Kansas and K-State.

"There's no tall people. That's why they suck. We figured it out," Henley said in reference to the K-State men's basketball team.

Henley's suggestion that K-Staters transform the campus into an Arizona desert before the next KU game had the crowd roaring with laughter.

He said it would be a loving way to remind them about their loss at the NCAA Tournament.

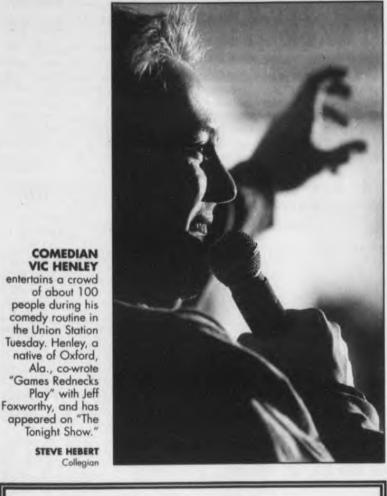

He also talked about the first college basketball game he went to in New York, a game between Harvard and Columbia. He said he thought he could get a better Nerf game going.

Henley gave the crowd a joke they could take with them, stressing that it was simple, so everyone should be able to remember it.

"You know what they call duct tape in Tennessee? Chrome," Henley said.

The event was sponsored by Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee.

Precautionary measures
Breast cancer can be stopped by early detection

Il women run the risk of developing breast cancer. Although the risk increases as women grow older, the cancer can develop at any age, according to the American Cancer Society.

You're never too young for any disease," 25-yearold Kristina Paylou, breast cancer survivor, said.

Pavlou, who is also the director of public education for the Y-ME National Breast Cancer Organization, said the only weapon against breast cancer is early detection. She said women need to understand the facts. "Even though it's rare to have breast cancer at an early age, the numbers keep raising each year," she said,

"and we don't know why. "Breast cancer affects everyone. It doesn't matter how old you are."

Cindy Burke is director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center. "College-age women feel like it's something that won't happen to them," Burke said. Researchers are wavering on the issue of at what age and how often women should receive mammograms, Burke said

Many lumps can be detected only by a mammogram and not by self exams.

Family history is the biggest known risk factor, Burke said. However, many risk factors for breast cancer are not known, according to the National Cancer

TORY BY RACHAEL KRUEGER . ILLUSTRATION BY BILL KRAAI

If women don't think they're at risk for breast cancer, think again, Paylou said.

"Seventy percent of women with breast cancer don't have any family history of the disease," she said.

Alcohol also acts as a risk factor, Pavlou said.

Two drinks a day raises the chances for breast cancer 70 percent," she said. Susan Carter, director of communications at the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation, said she agreed that college women don't think of breast cancer

"It's very important to reach younger women," Carter said. "If they begin self examinations now, they'll practice it the rest of their life."

A mammogram, the special x-ray that finds breast tumors, is normally practiced on women older than 40, according to the National Cancer Institute. Carter said individuals with a family history of breast cancer should visit their health-care professionals to determine the need for an earlier mammogram.

Carter said the apathy among younger women is widespread.

Young women should practice self-examinations monthly and receive professional examinations periodi-

"It should be like flossing your teeth," Carter said.

Testing yourself

Though breast cancer is more common in older women, the cancer can develop at any age. It is recommended that college women begin the habit of self-examination early because the best weapon against breast cancer

Conducting a self-exam

1. Lie down and put a pillow under your right shoulder. Place your right arm behind your head. Use the finger pads of your three middle fingers on your left hand to feel for lumps.

2. Press firmly enough to know how your breast feels. If you're not sure how hard to press, ask your doctor. Learn what your breast feels like most of the time. A firm ridge in the lower curve of your breast is normal.

3. Move around the breast in a set way and do it this make sure you've gone over the entire breast area, and helps you remember how your breast feels each

4. Examine your left breast in the same way you examined the right. If you find any changes, see your doctor immediately.

Bachelor's of fine arts show grotesquely mesmerizing

► To see the show. The bachelor's of fine arts show of Scott Anderson, Kevin Bays and Melanie Jerome is in the Willard Gallery until Friday. Gallery hours are from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The editorial. More people should see what the BFA art show has to offer. See Page 4 RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Finding beauty in the grotesque is not necessarily a new theme in art, but it proves a worthy basis for the second-straight strong bachelor's of fine arts show in the Willard Gallery.

The show includes a painter, Scott Anderson, and two ceramic sculptors, Kevin Bays and Melanie Jerome. Like last week's show, this one holds together both thematically and formally, although Jerome doesn't follow the grotesque nature of the other two artists.

Anderson's paintings of raw meat, in this case poultry, in various stages of inspection continue his fascination with raw nature found in the disease paintings of his show last spring. In this case, the slabs of poultry become slightly abstracted into red, pink and flesh colors lighted with a yellow tinted light, ultimately creating an object of beauty

As in Anderson's "Resurrection," oil on canvas (1997), a larger-thanlife piece of poultry explodes on canvas, radiating in a star pattern that slightly evokes a Georgia O'Keeffe flower, though it wasn't intentional. The only aspect keeping the poultry from pure abstraction is the intrusion of two electrodes clamped on the

"I'm painting that because I'm sort of commenting on the duality of the sciences - how things are sometimes done in the name of progress,"

Anderson said.

Anderson, who is not a vegetarian, said he doesn't necessarily want sympathy for animals but is interested in posing blanket social statements and finding beauty in something so raw and crude.

"I'm not one of those apathetic artist types," Anderson admits. "I don't make art for art's sake - I make it for more external reasons than that.'

Bays couldn't be deemed apathetic, by anyone's measure. The artist, like his work, has issues.

"I used to do safe artwork, which I perceive as something that doesn't take a lot of brainpower to create," Bays said.

Bays' ceramics aren't safe, rather somewhat confrontational with a high dose of shock value. A work like

"Double Breasted Meat with Flesh Cup," a low-fire stoneware piece involving a raw slab of meat still on the bone sitting on a hollow, cylindrical cup with flesh-evoking wrapping, tells more of a personal narrative than addressing formal concerns.

Each work begins with a finished drawing, sometimes inspired by the artist's favorite music, of which many are shown here. It finishes with the second stage of the ceramics them-

"Loaded Weapon," a high-fire stoneware, again plays with the hollow cylinder, though this time Bays has included mini-bombs attached along the horizontal spine. The outer layer includes three stacked heads of varying size and a rough, bark-like

Blood donations benefit 88 counties across Kansas

► Need more info?

The Red Cross will be host to a community blood drive today from noo to 6 p.m. and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 1:45 p.m. in Pottorf Hall on the Riley County Fairgrounds.

BECKY WINTER

Free cookies and juice aren't the only advantages to donating blood. Lives can be saved, too.

"Anyone who lives up to age 72 has a 95-percent chance of needing a blood product sometime in their life," Amy Simon, communications specialist for the Central Plains Region Red Cross, said. "Donating blood is an easy and fairly painless way to help patients throughout the region.'

"It only takes a maximum of about an hour to an hour and a half," Simon said.

"It could help car accident victims to cancer patients to a 2-yearold I saw with leukemia in the hospital last week," she said.

The blood will go to help hospital patients in the central plains region, which includes 88 counties in Kansas and nine in Oklahoma, Si-

Volunteers must be 17 years or older, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in general good health.

They cannot have a history of viral hepatitis after age 10 and cannot be in an AIDS at-risk behavior

Simon said she hopes K-State's defeat of the University of Kansas in the Red Cross blood donation competition earlier this semester encourages people to donate this week.

'We thank the dedicated donors who supported the competition and hope they continue to support the Red Cross," Simon said.

Donors try for another victory against Kansas in blood drive

SHAWN T. DENTON

K-State was victorious over rival the University of Kansas in this semester's Red Cross blood donation competition. K-State donated 651 pints of blood while KU recorded 349 pints.

Amy Simon, a Red Cross Central Plains employee, said the schools have competed every semester since 1993.

"The Central Plains Blood Region serves almost 110 hospitals and 88 counties in Kansas and nine in Oklahoma,' Simon said. "The blood is distributed among those regions." Simon said the competition allowed students to show pride in their school while taking part in an important service. "It's good to have fun, to show school spirit and to help the hospitals at the same time," Simon said.

The blood donation competition gave students who do not ordinarily donate blood an opportunity to do so.

"We're hoping that a chance to show school spirit will be an extra reason to donate blood and to make students realize the process is fairly easy and painless," Simon said.

K-State and KU had their blood drives on different weeks this semester. The two schools will face off in a head-to-head competition next fall

Simon said next semester's competition should be interesting to watch because they will be able to see each university progress at the same time.

unnerved by this work," he said. "I try to shock people with real power. It's a domination - dominating the medium to do what you want to do.'

If Jerome's more conventional ceramics prove anything, it's that they make a refreshing juxtaposition to the others' work. Although her organic, flowing ce-

Her "Creep," a low-fire stoneware with stains, outmodes nature with a sleeker, smoother take on a starfish. "Four Fingers and a Thumb," low-fire stoneware, is a reverse study of the classical ceramic hand, which almost begs for interaction.

You can almost see Jerome in your mind creating the piece, finding its inner rhythm.

"I'm trying to capture gestures and movements," Jerome said. "I'm trying to relate to humans and nature."

Tiger Woods uses talk show to explain reason to drop African American identity

CHICAGO (AP) - When Tiger Woods was asked in school to check one box that best described his background, he couldn't settle on one. Perhaps that's because there wasn't a box for Cablinasian.

That's the word that best describes his background, a blend of Caucasian, black, Indian and Asian, the 21-year-old golf star said on "The Oprah Winfrey Show Woods, described as the first black

The relatively low casualty toll among hostages was surprising to some. An armed forces assessment early in the 126-day siege estimated such an assault would cost the lives of 70 percent of those in the compound.

The hostages, all male, were mostly Peruvians, but also included 24 Japanese - 12 business executives and 12 diplomats, including Japan's ambassador, Morihisa Aoki, who suffered a slight elbow injury during the rescue. There were no Americans among the

Less than an hour after the raid, Fujimori strapped on a bulletproof vest and victoriously entered the compound. He shook ex-hostages' hands and joined with them and soldiers in singing the national anthem.

Smiling and carrying a large redand-white Peruvian flag, Fujimori traveled with two busloads of hostages, apparently unharmed, to a military hos-

Other hostages were rushed off in ambulances.

Friends and family gathered at the nearby hospital to look for loved ones.

"We're here to applaud the hostages and police for their bravery," said one woman, Edith Gonzalez. "There was no other alternative but to attack."

But the sister of one hostage said she wasn't sure

"I don't know if the attack was necessary," said Nancy Dominguez, 53. "All I know is it was a horrible shame."

Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said Peru had not told him in advance of the raid, even though the compound is technically Japanese soil. Japan had repeatedly asked the Peruvians to avoid any actions that might endanger the hostages 'Our country was not informed in advance, and this is very regrettable," Hashimoto said.

Leuchtenburg spoke about the opposition Roosevelt faced during the '30s. He told a story about a Kansas man who locked himself in a tornado shelter and vowed to stay there until Roosevelt was out of office.

"FDR faced a lot of hostility in 1936," Leuchtenburg said.

Kassebaum Baker and Leuchtenburg also discussed campaign tactics from the period, such as the way many other candidates campaigned Roosevelt's platform, and how 1930s politics had a much more leisurely pace than today's fast-paced, technological

When Sue Neal tears open her cable bill next month, she will see another increase. It is not much this time, just 74 cents for the extended basic. Still, coupled with the additional 21 cents for the remote controls and the adjustments in January, cable is becoming a luxury for the household.

"I don't like the way they are always raising the bill. It's getting to be more of a racket," Neal said.

She has never complained to anyone about the rates, because she is not sure whom to talk to. "I might start with TCI, but after that I am not sure who to call," she said.

The answer is printed on her cable bill. It is the local franchise authority. That is, the city of Manhattan.

The fact that she did not know this is not surprising. Until recently, the city did rates for residential service are regulated by the local franchising authority.

This is the result of both the city's failure to know its responsibilities of receiving complaints, and the failure of the FCC regulations to be clear.

"Part of the difficulty that the city had was in interpreting the intent of the law," Dianne Stoddard, assistant to the city manager, said. "Some (statutes) are very vague."

According to FCC documents, the local franchise authority is expected to monitor the basic rates and report complaints about extended services. If it chooses to, the authority can also regulate rates.

Stoddard said the city has limited authority over basic cable, which is usually taken care of during rate negotiations.

Steve Brockart, attorney adviser for cable service for the FCC in Washington, D.C., said the franchise authority has the sole responsibility for reporting complaints for extended services, too.

Earlier this month, Assistant City Attorney Bernard Irvine said he did not know if the city handled TCI complaints or Not true, the FCC said. According to a variety of FCC documents, the local franchise authority is the one who is responsible for maintaining basic cable service and monitoring rates.

A local franchise authority is the local government agency that allows the cable company to sell cable services in return for a franchise fee. The franchise fee is compensation a cable company pays the city for use of the public right-of-ways to lay its cables.

According to Stoddard, TCI paid $136,113 last year in franchise fees. In 1997, with the franchise fee raising from 3 percent to 5 percent in January, the expected income from TCI will be $235,000.

Hawley will also retain some of his present duties once he steps down. He will be involved in advising, preparation of line schedules, scholarships and the King Hall renovation project, he said.

Hawley will be teaching courses in the analytical area of the chemistry department, he said.

He also has intentions of writing a text book for one of the courses, Chemical Analysis, if he has time. "Dale has served the chemistry department very well," M. Duane Nellis, associate dean of arts and sciences, said. While some high school students only think about prom, homecoming and the upcoming football games, there are some who care more about supporting the community.

The SHARE center is an organization run by high school students from Manhattan under the umbrella of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"They come here because they want something to do," said Shirley Bramhall, executive director of Flint Hills Breadbasket and SHARE spon-

The youth in charge of SHARE are responsible for distributing clothing, household goods, furniture and sports equipment to low-income families.

"This is one of the few organizations where youth provides service for the community," Bramhall said.

Recipients of SHARE must meet financial qualifications. After qualifying, recipients are referred to SHARE by the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Aman Gill, junior coordinator and junior at Manhattan High School, said people are able to come to the center every 14 days.

The SHARE center is collecting sports equipment of any kind for children of all ages. It needs baseball gloves, cleats, T-ball equipment and soccer equipment

Some area children want to play on city sports teams but can't afford the fee or the equipment. These children can apply to Manhattan Parks and Recreation for a scholarship, and SHARE will help supply the balls, shoes and bats.

Kim Pride, senior coordinator and senior at MHS, said she has been involved with SHARE since it was taken over by high-school students three years ago.

"It was my sophomore year in high school, and I was lacking community involvement. I was too young to have a job, and I needed something to fill my time," Pride said.

Pride and Gill, the two paid student coordinators, are responsible for everything that happens at the center.

"We have to be on the premises whenever it is open. We direct volunteers and make decisions with the

O JUDGE RULES MAN COMPETENT FOR TRIAL IN PITTSBURG SLAYING.

GIRARD - A convicted killer accused of stabbing to death a Pittsburg State University student is competent to stand trial, a state district judge ruled.

The ruling came 10 days after a hearing at which Dr. J. L. Fernando, a psychiatrist at the Larned hospital, testified he found no evidence Kleypas was mentally unfit to stand trial.

City commissioner stresses commerce, efficient government

CAMI SOWERS

The Manhattan City Commission has some fresh new faces, and Ed Klimek is one of them.

Klimek said he decided to run for the seat to give a business voice to the commission.

"I wanted to bring a perspective of business, the business owners and managers of the area, to city government,"

Any well-rounded commission needs voices from all aspects of the community, Klimek said.

He said many business matters are discussed during a city commission term. 'When you're on the City Commission you deal with a lot of business-related matters," he said. "What you do affects business development, new business enhancement. It's so business oriented, you need to be thinking in business

Klimek said improving the process of city government and the decision process of the City Commission will be important to him in the upcoming year. Klimek said the commission will try improve the process of city government and the process of how decisions are made. He said he will attempt to make fair and responsible decisions in a swift manner and said he hopes other commissioners feel the same way.

Decisions not made in a timely matter are very frustrating to people who come to the commission for answers, and city staff gets frustrated because things get put on hold,

He said people need to get answers to questions and issues, and the staff members need to know what process they need to take to get things done.

Klimek said other important issues include the economic expansion, the business park, the fate of the Riley County Jail and the soon to be vacated Riley County Police Department building.

"The commission has become more complex over the years because of community involvement in community issues. That makes it tougher to deal with because you have so many varying opinions," Klimek said.

You have to be fair to all those opinions, so people tend to be more involved in what the commission does."

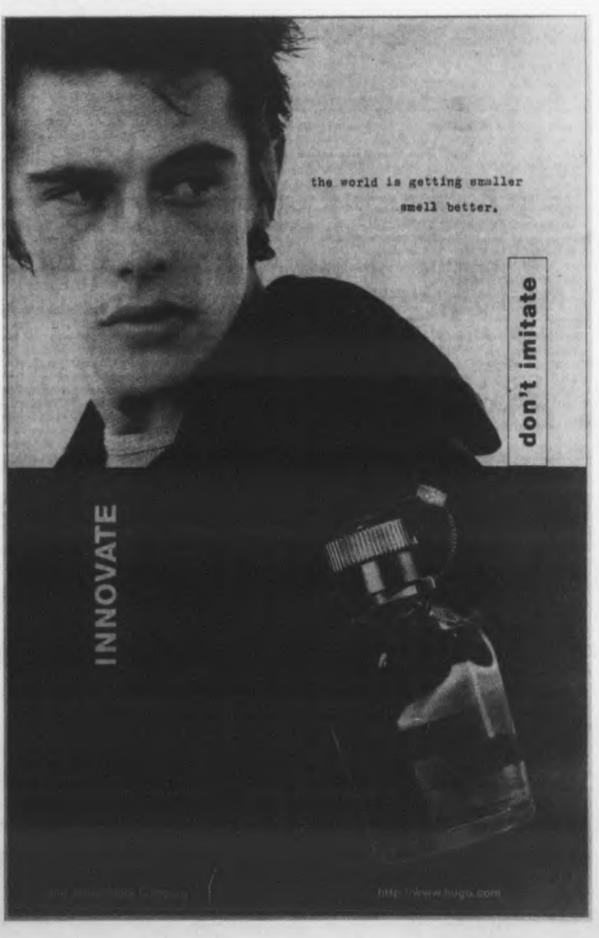

Klimek is also heavily involved in the community. He is a member of the Riley County United Way campaign committee and works on the Mayor's Holiday Tree task force for the Flint Hills Breadbasket. He is also on the board of directors for the Geary County United Way.

Klimek is also a past board member of Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan and a graduate of Future Manhattan, which is a training outreach program and a twoyear chair of Walk America for March of Dimes.

City should monitor cable billing costs hances are, you're new to paying bills or you don't have the time to examine the fine print on your statements. But you probably did notice that your cable bill went up.

But you probably didn't notice that little thing on your bill that says the local franchise authority is in charge of regulating TCI.

That's OK - the local franchise authority didn't notice it either.

EDITORIAL BOARD Until now, the city of Manhattan didn't know that it was required by law to monitor > and regulate TCI. Now it does. So let's see some regula-

Customer complaints should be reported to the Federal Communications Commission by the city of Manhattan. TCl says it reports these complaints on its own, but residents have not seen many improvements in the services they complain about. Now TCI will report these complaints to the city. Customers could even call the city attorney's office to make their voices heard.

This change has the potential to give cable customers an attentive and responsive outlet for their frustrations.

By filing paperwork with the FCC, Manhattan could get itself the power to make a difference in the rate hikes that have its residents steaming mad.

That would mean knowing the FCC regulations and closely monitoring TCI's rates which would require extra work for the city staff. But isn't that why we are paying them?

Right now, in order to get more than a few channels, you have to shell out whatever TCI wants to charge you. TCI works for itself, and its motives are purely monetary. But the city staff is supposedly here to serve the residents of Manhattan, and the residents of Manhattan are facing skyrocketing cable bills.

When David slew himself

Medical advances might end diseases, but can they change behavior?

JUSTIN WILD is a senior mail your comments to Justin at lius-

On Monday, a metaphorical David came closer to killing Goliath. It was announced that medical researchers were close to taking another step, or slinging another stone, if you will, toward defeating HIV.

Researchers announced they might have discovered the way the virus spreads through the body, via a small sporelike "harpoon" that attaches to a host cell.

Theoretically, if scientists could stop the virus from firing its harpoon, they could stop it from spreading throughout the body. At first reading this, I thought it was English and education. You can ethe best news I'd heard in a long time.

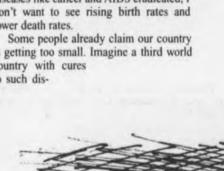

If humanity could defeat this virus, it would save millions of lives around the world. Additionally, it would eliminate one more bogeyman awaiting the world in the next millennium. Then I got to thinking: What would happen if scientists were able to stop the virus? Not many people truly watch their risky behavior right now; many of us, particularly at college, have made mistakes in the past. If HIV could be stopped, or at least turned into a livable condition, would people forget all the other nasty little STDs out there and just go back to the Sexual Revolution of the 1970s? Condom sales would plummet; use of the pill would probably skyrocket. HIV and the people who have fought against it and died from it might only be tucked into a short section in a history book, if that. If a disease can be cured, can behavior be cured as well?

looming down on a man. Behavior is the true monster we need to fight. Behavior doesn't just go along with HIV, but other diseases as well.

With the advent of new cures, new ways of life must emerge as well. I want to see diseases like cancer and AIDS eradicated; I don't want to see rising birth rates and lower death rates.

is getting too small. Imagine a third world country with cures to such diseases. Countries such as China have gone as far as limiting the amount of children a couple might have. Will we see the same thing if we are able to zero out causes of death?

It seems crazy, and sounds a little corny, but I keep coming back to a part in the movie "Jurassic Park" when Jeff Goldblum's character asserts "Your scientists were so preoccupied with whether or not they could, they didn't stop to think if they should."

It sounds cruel, but I thought the same thing when I read about the HIV research on CNN's Web page.

Are we prepared to continue to educate ourselves? Once cures for diseases are found, can we cure the things which caused sicknesses to sprout in the first place? Personally, I don't think this is possible for the human race. As human beings, we do a fine job of killing ourselves. Between smoking, stress, diet, drinking, sex and everything else, I believe Americans lead the world

No one deserves to die from diseases such as cancer or AIDS, but some people certainly seem to try. What about the people who don't take any preventative steps to keep themselves healthy? We know smoking has dangerous carcinogens and that unprotected sex is risky. Maybe, before we learn about a tiny cell, we need to study ourselves a little more. We don't need a Goliath. Our slings are already pointed at ourselves.

K Hill needs a facelift ne of the great things about leaving town is coming home. It's those little things that make you happy to return. Someone greeting you at the airport. Your dog licking your face. Sleeping in your own bed.

Likewise, cities around the world have their own little signs that scream "Home Sweet Home."

Cairo has the pyramids. London has Big Ben. Paris has the Eiffel Tower. New York has the Statue of Liberty. Lawrence has the smokestacks of the fertilizer plant.

Here in Manhattan, we even have our own internationally known symbol. It's our little slice of American pie. There is nothing like pulling into town and seeing the big KS floating above us on K Hill. This is a sure sign that we have returned to the K-State Mecca of the world.

With us standing on the brink of the millennium, this is a perfect time to spruce up our little mark on the world. Let's face it, our symbol of home is looking a little shabby

If I were to win the lottery and had some pocket change to toss around, this is one of those fun projects I would sponsor. What I am thinking of is nothing to fear.

The changes would be subtle enough to uphold our tradition but drastic enough to launch a new appearance for our little campus. I am not proposing a multimillion-dollar face lift, just a little fix-up.

The first thing I would do is one of the things I can't believe wasn't proposed a long time ago. For me, it just

I would add a big fat U to that KS. You can see where I am going with this. We already have a MANHATTAN, now we need a KSU

Can you think of a better way to advertise our great home and university?

The next step in my little plan would involve some serious grooming. I'd put those genius landscape architects to work. Plant some flowers. Plant some trees. Move some dirt. Tidy the existing landscape. Repaint the letters.

You get the picture. The KS could use a manicure as it

Then to make sure that we could enjoy our new KSU 24 hours a day, I would put some heavy duty lights up there. Nothing tacky, just enough so that we could gawk at our new addition at night.

Then once everything was finished, an attractive stone fence and gate could be built to prevent vandalism. I am of course alluding to the incident last fall, when some insidious Nebraska fans defaced the N in Manhattan. For a little work and a little money, we could have our own little piece of paradise.

The sad thing is, the last time I checked I had not won the lottery. (I know that you are shocked.) I have to be honest, I don't even play the lottery. So I guess that makes our chances of me winning pretty slim. But this doesn't have to rain on our purple parade. There are other ways to go about this. This is where the K-State pride factor comes into play.

As the alumni roll back into town for commencement and football season, it is key to harness their purple affection. A campaign could be organized to get this project rolling. And maybe those landscape architects could put their brain power to work for the sake of K-State and a class project.

In the words of "Seinfeld's" Kramer, lets get going on this "like stink on a monkey." And I'll let you know if I win the lottery.

ROYAL PURPLE PROMOTION LACKS

SENSITIVITY

Editor,

"Shoot Yourself" - that is the advertisement used by the Royal Purple yearbook for its nontraditional photo shoots during the winter.

The slogan was positioned in the Collegian with a handgun drawn on either side. I suppose the slogan is meant to be catchy and fun ... "Shoot Yourself" is catchy and fun? I just don't understand why they use this slogan, and I've decided to speak out against it. At enrollment I was contemplating purchasing a yearbook, but hesitated and asked if they would stop using the "Shoot Yourself" slogan.

I was told flat out, "No!"

If organizations at our university are adamant about using this type of slogan, I suggest the financial aid office use, "Come get AIDS with us." That's funny

Lafene Health Center should use, "Get Sick and Die" ... wait, then they would lose business ... "Get Sick and Stay Sick." There are a wide range of things that can be used in a warped way like physical and mental disabilities, chronic illness, skin color or anything that might sell.

On a more serious note, suicide is the ninth leading cause of all deaths. Someone attempts suicide every 45 seconds. It is the leading cause of death for young adults or, in other words, the primary way Collegian and yearbook readers die.

Despite the severity of the problem suicide remains a strange phenomenon in our society. People often say, "I could just shoot myself" without thinking of what they are saying. Nobody wants to talk about suicide openly or honestly. Instead, we get the taboo of suicide, which solves nothing. One theory of suicide is that the glorification of lighthearted attitude increases the suicide risk. After a month of seeing the words "Shoot Yourself" surrounded by handguns I don't think the Royal Purple can guarantee that it would not have a negative effect.

In fact, I believe that the psychology department and the marketing department would feel this slogan is risky, unnecessary and not productive.

I guess it makes sense that ignorant people would find the taboo of suicide pretty funny and use it to sell services.

I know some people thought that racism was funny and many companies once used racist advertising. I request that the Royal Purple recognize the implications of the statement they have

Essentially, the slogan creates the notion that suicide is something to laugh about, and the people who call into the Crisis Center or Lafene's counseling services with serious problems are part of a campus-wide joke.

The slogan mocks those who have attempted or successfully completed suicide. To the Royal Purple: Quit being irresponsible. Stop mocking your readers and end your insensitivity.

THE OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING TO HEAL THE HEARTLAND

Content of the case for and against McVeigh THE PROSECUTION

THE PLOT.

· Present photo records and other evidence, contending McVeigh and Terry Nichols made bombing plans as early as September 1994.

• Put McVeigh's former Army buddy Michael Fortier on the stand to testify that he and McVeigh drove by the Murrah building so McVeigh could case it out.

 Point to McVeigh's strong anti-government views as a possible motive

THE BOMB.

Introduce a Kansas receipt for 2,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate fertilizer dated Sept. 30, 1994, found at Nichols' house, bearing McVeigh's fingerprint.

 Present laboratory tests showing chemical traces from a detonating cord were on clothes, earplugs and a knife from the car McVeigh drove shortly after the bombing.

• Present evidence that Nichols bought or tried to buy fertilizer, diesel fuel and detonating cords.

THE TRUCK.

 Call two employees of a Junction City, Ryder rental agency to identify McVeigh as the renter of the truck used in the bombing Introduce a security camera videotape showing McVeigh buying a hamburger at a McDonald's near the rental agency shortly before the truck was rented.

 Present testimony from the owner of a motel who say McVeigh checked in and drove a yellow Ryder truck.

THE DEFENSE THE PLOT.

• Tear down Fortier and seek to distance McVeigh from Nichols by showing that many of the bombing preparations were done by Nichols.

 Soften McVeigh's image; possibly accuse the government of trying to persecute McVeigh for his beliefs, rather than on the evidence.

 Attack the physical evidence connecting McVeigh to bomb materials analyzed by the FBI lab.

· Prove Nichols tried to implicate McVeigh by handing him a bombingmaterials receipt to pick up McVeigh's fingerprints

THE TRUCK.

Raise the specter of John Doe No. 2 - and perhaps others - to show that somebody besides McVeigh was in charge of renting the truck and setting off the explosion. Both of the government's witnesses spoke of a second man with McVeigh, a man who doesn't match Nichols' description.

Prosecutors to open with testimony about moment of bombing

DENVER - Seeking to stir jurors' emotions early, prosecutors intend to open their case against Timothy McVeigh today by calling Oklahoma City bombing survivors and rescuers to describe their terrifying ordeal.

Opening statements from both sides are expected to last at least half a day, after which prosecutors will put on their first witnesses. "The focus will be on the moment of the bombing," a source familiar with the government's strategy told the Associated Press. "The first witnesses will be victims and law enforcement types." Prosecutors also plan to play dramatic news videotape of the frantic aftermath of the April 19, 1995, bombing if convicted of murder and conspiracy in that blew apart Oklahoma City's ninestory federal building, killing 168 people - including 19 children.

Law professor Christopher Mueller, also of the University of Colorado, said, "You really want to show the jury that this was a crime that had consequences, human consequences.'

The emotional atmosphere in the courtroom will be heightened by the presence of 12 or more victims who will be seated in the audience, in partial view of the jury. Previously, only one or two victims have attended the laborious jury selection process the deadliest act of terrorism on U.S.

Prosecutors intend to show that McVeigh embraced a culture of hate, racism and anti-government fervor, and bombed the building in retaliation for the fiery government siege at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas.

Presenting the case for the prosecution will be Assistant U.S. Attorney Joseph Hartzler, who has yet to speak with jurors except to say good morning during jury selection.

Hartzler, who suffers from multiple sclerosis, probably will speak from his wheelchair at a customized lectern that lowers electronically.

and six alternates was selected on Tuesday after three weeks of questioning, but U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch scrambled their identifying numbers so it was impossible to say for sure who ended up on the jury.

Meantime, the judge scheduled one session for Wednesday, an in-chambers hearing on a defense complaint about one of the prosecution's witnesses.

The AP on Wednesday obtained a thumbnail list of the seven-man, fivewoman jury, and the three men and three women who will sit as alternates. How the two panels break down by race is not known, but all the jurors are white except for two, who are either Hispanic or Native American.

A theme in the answers the jurors and alternates gave was that of sympathy for the victims of the April 19, 1995, Oklahoma City federal building bombing that killed 168 people and injured hundreds more.

The first juror selected, a grandmother who lives in a mountain home, said she watched several hours of the bombing coverage on television with her husband. She said she cried and prayed for the victims.

Another juror, a woman who works with learning-disabled children, looked over at McVeigh in court and expressed surprise that he could have committed such a heinous crime.

"He looks like a nice kid," she said. "It's overwhelming for me to think that this person who looks like the average type of person could do such a thing.

Both, however, said they could recommend the death penalty.

The bombing personally affected many of the jurors, albeit in small ways.

A young man who works as a landscaper for a transit agency said that after he heard a fertilizer bomb gutted the building, he worried about the stability of the Weed 'n' Feed he uses at bus stops. He asked his supervisor about it and was assured it was safe. This juror, who is raising a young son by himself, said he was kind of excited about getting his jury summons, but was emotionally moved by the 19 children killed in the blast. "It's kind of hard to take when you see children die," he said.

A golf-playing computer installer said he empathized with the bombing victims so much that he gave clothes and food to the relief effort as part of a company-wide effort.

"I felt, here's some people in pain and suffering, what can I do to help out?" he said.

The jury and alternate panel includes several with military ties, including a retired Navy electrician on a submarine who now manages public housing complexes. He also is a Deadhead whose attendance at about 15 concerts harmed his hearing. On the alternate panel, a retail store worker who had served in the Air Force working on an aircraft carrier said he wants laws that would make it mandatory to carry a gun. He said he would feel safer having everybody in his store with a gun instead of just

Baylor sweeps 3-game series from Cats; Schesser ties single season mark with 14th home run of year

COLLEGIAN STAFF REPORTS

WACO, Texas - The K-State baseball team dropped a threegame series to the Baylor Bears at Ferrell Field Wednesday after it lost the final game of the series 9-7.

The Cats stormed out to an early 6-0 lead after the second inning partly because of a five-run second inning.

Catcher Yancy Ayres began the flurry with a single to the shortstop and advanced to second off of center fielder Garrett Bell's single to left field.

Schesser

With two on and one out, both runners advanced a base after a wild pitch and scored after left-fielder Eric Sommerhauser reached second on an error by the catcher.

Third baseman Josh Marn reached first base on an error by the third baseman and pushed Sommerhauser to third base. Heath Schesser knocked in both runners with his 14th homer of the season, which ties a K-State single season record.

Baylor (30-19, 16-11) used a four-run seventh inning to hand K-State its 11th straight loss. The Cats move to 22-21 overall and 5-19 in the conference. Baylor right-fielder James Blair extended his hitting streak to 23 games. In the doubleheader on Tuesday, K-State dropped the first game 9-7, but not before a ninth inning rally where the Cats scored five runs. Schesser went 3-4 in the game including his 14th double of the year and a home run. Left-fielder Scott Poepard went 2-5 and Casey Cook gave up six runs off of seven hits in just two innings of work, but K-State rallied in the third, scoring five runs and posting the score at 6-5 after the inning.

Mickey Blount replaced Cook in the third and faced 19 batters in 5.2 innings. Blount, in just his second game back from a shoulder injury, gave up just one run off one hit and struck out five batters.

K-State led 8-7 going into the top of the ninth and scored a security run for good measure. Relief pitcher David Johnson came in to try to make the

The K-State women's tennis team will look to put the regular season behind them today in its first round match at the inaugural Big 12 Tournament at the Penick-Allison Tennis Center in Austin, Texas, against Oklahoma.

After getting off to a promising 7-2 start, the Cats ended the regular season by losing 11 straight. The Cats will come into the contest as the tournament's 11th seed.

If you are looking back at the season, we have put too much emphasis on how we can survive what's happening to us," head coach Steve Bietau said. "We should have been looking at doing what it takes to overcome our probwin, at the No. 3 spot with senior Karen Nicholson, but several of the other matches were closely contested. At No. 1 singles, Yana Dorodnova stretched Sooner Kate Dunlevy to three sets, losing the third set 6-4.

Oklahoma won the remaining four singles matches in straight sets, but K-State was able to stay within 6-3, 6-3 in all four matches.

Dorodnova and Lena Piliptchak blew-out the Sooner team of Dunleyv and Angela Stroup.

The loss was K-State's fifth, that later turned into 11. For the Cats it has been a tough season, one in which the team has seen many players fall to injuries. Starting players Dorodnova, Nicholson, Dinah Watson and Nikki

Lagerstrom have all suffered injuries that have forced them

But when they have been healthy, it has been a matter of executing on the courts. "We just haven't been able to put it all together as a team," senior Nikki Lagerstrom said. "Some days, certain players are playing great; the next day they aren't."

Last season, the Cats enjoyed a successful season, one in which the team advanced to the NCAA Tournament for the first time ever. Karina Kuregian, the Cats' No. 1 player for much of the year, was gone from that team.

Despite the departure of Kuregian, Cat players still did not envision this tough of a season.

"When we started out the season, I really thought we would finish somewhere in the top half of the conference," Lagerstrom said. "Yes, we lost Karina, but we had everyone else back. I honestly thought we would be much better than we have been.

If the Cats are able to beat the Sooners, the team will play its second round match Friday.

K-State finished the inaugural tournament at Alvamar Country Club in 10th place after it shot a three round score of 325-323-331 for a final score of 979, 115 strokes over

"Pretty much all semester we struggled once we got the ball on the greens. On that course if you try to make a birdie you're going to get a high score," Kristi Knight, head coach, said. "We used to think breaking 330 was good in a round, but now we're disappointed if we don't break 320."

The Cats were in ninth place after round two on Monday - 42 strokes behind eventual champion Texas. Knight said Alvamar was a tough course and especially tough to read the greens.

"I feel like I had a good tournament and it wasn't all that disappointing," Slater said. "I had a hard time reading the greens. I would either leave it five feet short or five feet long and always had a tough put.

In her final tournament as a Wildcat, Slater finished the tournament in a 10-way tie for 16th place.

"With the strength of the field I think Anne did a tremendous job," Knight said. "Ann has really been hitting the ball great and has gained distance with every shot. She really hit the ball well and had a great tournament."

Sophomore Jane Yi was flanked by two poor rounds her first two days as she posted rounds of 81 and 83 Sunday and Monday.

Helpful insight from Mr. Bojangles concerning K-State football

JON BALMER cations. You can e-mail your comments to Jon at (jkb2004@ksv.edu).

Returning back to the hallowed plains of Manhattan late Sunday night, I had a revelation of sorts. You see, I was on the finishing leg of a 10-hour drive back from Waco, Texas. While Waco might seem like the ideal spot to find revelations (Yes, 1 did visit the Branch Davidian Compound, and it's quite the sight), my moment of clarity came forth courtesy of a deserted stretch of Interstate 70.

Gulping down Mountain Dew after Mountain Dew and teaming up with the tape player for a rousing rendition of Warren Zevon's "Werewolves of London," I was doing all a Wildcat could to fend off the tempting slumber. However, as approached Manhattan, a voice cut through the tunes. "Listen here, daddy-o, keep those big gazers open and guide this ride home. Can you dig it?" Trying to comprehend what was happening, I suddenly realized the voice barking out orders was none other than that of Sammy Davis Jr. While I sat in a befuddled state, Sammy explained that he was speaking from the high-rise in the sky, and he had traded in his tap shoes to oversee the sports world. As Mr. Bojangles put it, "I'm spreading the sports jam for the big mamma jamma.

As the conversation progressed, Sammy revealed the reason for his radio appearance. After viewing the results of the 1997 K-State football season, he felt it necessary to give some insight on things to come. I listened intently as Sammy ran through events set to take shape within KSU Stadium.

After all was said, Sammy bid me farewell and brought back the tunes, but his message stuck like a good plate of ribs. That one-eyed wonder had fulfilled my curiosity, helping to put the purple puzzle together. So, from one Cat to another, here are some of Sammy's grid-iron revelations.

 At the Sept. 22 clash against Bowling Green, a minor misspelling will equal mass chaos at Wagner Field. Fliers circulating the campus mistakenly proclaim "Bowling Free" as the upcoming opponent. As kickoff rolls around, thousands of polyester-clad lads brandishing bowling balls descend onto the turf. Figuring the fliers were hyping a freeof-charge kingpin showdown, the bowlers refuse to leave when informed of the misspelling. Rolling a couple of hostile balls at Coach Bill Snyder, the bowlers are calmed when Snyder agrees to cover the tab on beer and pretzels. Order is restored, and the pigskin bowl'ers go down quickly.

· Heading into the Oct. 4 showdown at Nebraska, Manhattan businesses decide to band together to give the Cats good luck. Rounding up the entire area supply of Big Red beverage products, the businesses empty the crimson colored drink into Tuttle Creek, projecting a "Dump the Huskers" message The plan backfires when, shortly after, local animals begin to chug down significant amounts of the cursed beverage. Soon, red squirrels begin to pop up all over campus, leaving students and faculty perplexed. The crimson-colored critters slowly return to their natural color, but the irony left behind proves accurate, as K-State falls once again to the Big Red Lincoln boys.

• In an Oct. 18 dicing of Texas A&M, running back Mike Lawrence will perfect his "Stray Cat Strut," a move that will replace "Raising the Roof."

Late in the first quarter, Allen returns to his normal state of mind when a misdirected Fort Riley paratrooper, meant to land at kickoff, comes crashing down on the KU coach. With his head together, Allen watches as the Jayhawks fall for the fifth straight year, bowing down 35-14 to the Cats. · At the Nov. 15 home finale against Colorado, ex-Kansas City Chief Steve Bono will be seen parking cars in the stadium lot. When asked by curious fans, the monotone Bono claims to be the son of Chiefs announcer Bill Grigsby. His true identity is revealed when Bono asks for directions to a good area restaurant.

1947 graduates celebrate reunion, campus growth

TRISHA LANGFORD

The year was 1947. Basketball games were played in Nichols gym, football games were at Memorial Stadium, and K-State did not have a student union.

Today and Friday the KSU Alumni Association will be host to the 50 year class reunion of "Many coming back will be going to the Union for the first time," Merle Eyestone, alumnus and former student government president, said.

Students from the class of 1947 contributed $5 per semester to the building fund for the K-State Student Union, although they never saw its completion during their college days.

Jody McGatlin, director of constituent programs, said that planning for the reunion is a year-long process. Invitations were sent in February. A committee of class members was also formed to write letters, encouraging members to attend.

"I have written quite a few to encourage them to come,"

Eyestone said. "It only comes around once every 50 years, and I am looking forward to this year's bigger turnout."

Seventy-eight members of the class are scheduled to visit the campus. Those who graduated in 1947 will be inducted into the Golden K Club during breakfast Friday morning. The Golden K Club consists of anyone who graduated from K-State 50 or more years ago.

Alumni from 22 states will be in attendance. That includes one alumnus from Puerto Rico and another from Alaska.

"They will be coming from coast-to-coast," McGatlin said. Throughout the two-day reunion, tours of the campus and Manhattan will be given. "Tours are a big hit. They can see new buildings and how much K-State and Manhattan have changed," McGatlin said. According to McGatlin, many attend to rekindle friendships with their classmates.

"It's a great opportunity to get caught up on the happenings of the years gone by," Eyestone

Some K-State grads choose Manhattan jobs

KARA LOWE

As graduation approaches, many students are preparing to leave Manhattan and begin their careers in another area. There are some graduates however, who choose to stay in Manhattan and establish themselves and their careers within this community.

Doug Ryan, senior in mechanical engineering, is one of these individuals.

"Two years ago I was looking for a summer job and happened to see a job announcement on a bulletin board. The company was interviewing that day and I signed up. Since it was last minute, I didn't wear a suit to the interview. However, I got the job working at the Junction City Foundries," Ryan said.

The company offered to pay for Ryan's last two years of school and also gave him the option of continuing to work for it after he graduated. They also offered to pay for additional school if he did accept the job so he would acquire more knowledge in management.

"The money was right and everything was good, so I decided to stay. Then there's the bars, drinking, women and K-State football - you know, all the other bonuses to living in Manhattan," Ryan said with a laugh.

Dave Dreiling, owner of It's Greek to Me, also decided to stay in Manhattan following his graduation in 1989.

"I bought into the store before graduation because I love Manhattan and wanted to stay here. It's great," Dreiling said. "Manhattan offers the advantages of both small and large towns, and you can get to know lots of people living here. It's also neat to live in a college

Dreiling has had the opportunity to see other areas, but chooses to remain in Manhattan. During his first two years in the business. Dreiling traveled extensively to over 100 other college towns selling sports wear. He became full owner of It's Greek to Me in 1992 and plans to remain in the community. "Of all of the towns I visited, there is none that I'd rather live in than Manhattan," Dreiling said.

Miles McKee, professor of animal science and industry and 1951 K-State alumnus, also chose to work in Manhattan after he traveled to other areas following graduation.

"I worked on a few ranches and was in the Marines after graduation. I came back to K-State in 1959 as an assistant instructor and University beef herdsman," McKee said. "K-State promised me a full-time job if I completed my Ph.D. at another school, so I went to Kentucky in 1965."

McKee has been a professor at K-State since 1967. At age 67, he says he has no immediate plans to retire because he enjoys working with students.

This is where I wanted to be. When K-State had an opening for beef herdsman, I really wanted the job because Manhattan was like home. I was eager to come back to Manhattan where I was satisfied and happy and anxious to come back to a place I enjoyed," McKee

Since he accepted the job at K-State, McKee has had other offers to teach elsewhere. However, he has turned all of the offers down.

"I decided to stay at K-State because like it here, " McKee said.

"This is my home, and I'm proud to be a part of what I think is an excellent animal science program. I wouldn't trade it for anything.

"I do not think the city has any role in monitoring private enterprise," recently elected City Commissioner Karen McCulloh said.

She said the city would be hard pressed to have a legal basis to do this. Actually, the city could take on the responsibility by filling out a form with Brockart said the city can be certified to regulate rates.

It requires that the city file a form with the FCC and monitor the cable company on a regular basis rather than just when the franchise is being negotiated.

Some smaller towns choose not to do this, either because of the time it requires or a lack of staff.

"If they do not, we take that as a decision by the local franchise authority, but we don't step in and do it for them," Brockart said

One reason for the city's reluctance to take on the chore of regulating the rates may be time

Richard Cofer, administrative director for TCI of Kansas, said the process of figuring the rates is complicated and time-consuming. Even Cofer admits that he isn't always sure how to do it.

"We have accountants that do that,"

The rates are figured on a formula set by the FCC. The company is allowed to charge a certain amount for every channel offered. Twenty-seven channels or less gets one rate, 35 and above gets

The FCC is a law-making agency that governs many other industries, including telephone, wireless communications, radio and the Internet. Documents produced by the FCC often include information for all these industries and are thousands of pages long.

Cofer said the city relies on his company to help when it comes to questions about the franchise.

"I would like to think we are a resource they can tap into in those situations. To some this might seem a little like the fox watching the chickens,"

Cofer said.

Some consumers wonder if the cable company can be relied upon to monitor themselves.

"The cable company wants to make more and more money off of the consumer and they don't want to give more service for that money," Neal said.

"Anyone who has been in this position knows you've only got so many chips to play," he said.

His main frustration is with the inability to balance the budget with existing resources and to meet faculty expectations with those resources,

Hawley said. "I suspect that every single department head at K-State would say the same thing," he said. Hawley said he was extremely pleased to see students involved in lobbying the legislature for increased funding.

'The students are much more supportive of our programs than the legislature," Hawley said.

Hawley said one of the high points of his position has been working with the high-quality faculty of the department.

He said he was disappointed with the high turnover rate within the chemistry department. Since 1993, 10 new faculty members have been added. Currently, there are still four more positions to be filled, he said.

Hawley estimated to fill those positions, costs would run well more than $1

"Trying to find the resources to do that has been extremely difficult," he

Young faculty from prestigious schools are accustomed to a high degree of technical support, Hawley said, Right now we don't have the funding to get much of that support.

"It's been a challenge," Hawley said. "I've welcomed the opportunity. It's just time to step into the next phase of my professional career."

Renters' insurance, a form of home owners' insurance, could help students alleviate the devastation from the unexpected, such as fires and theft

It can represent freedom, responsibility and fun, but with that comes the unexpected, such as fires, theft and other disasters. Renters' insurance could help alleviate the devastation.

Renters' insurance is a form of home owners' insurance designed for people who rent instead of owning their own property.

Landlords get insurance for liability that covers the dwelling. They are not responsible for the tenant's personal items.

"I mention to people when they lease from me that they can get renters' insurance, but it's not required," Rob Goode, landlord, said. "It's up to the individuals. If they think that they have stuff that needs to be covered, I think it's a be a good idea, not everyone needs to purchase their own.

'What a lot of students don't know is that in most cases, they probably don't need it," Jeff Kruse, insurance agent with Carlson and Wilson insurance agency, said. "If you are still a member of the household and your parents have home owners' insurance, then you may have some limited coverage for the personal property located in your dorm, fraternity, sorority or even an apartment."

Every insurance agency has a different policy. Some companies will write a policy for those living in residence halls, fraternity and sorority houses, and some will not. Some companies require each person within a residence to have their own policy, but some companies split the policy between all room-

Renters' insurance covers liability and almost all personal items within a residence.

Kruse, who teaches an insurance class at K-State, said students need to read the policy before sign-

"I always tell my students, if you really want to know what a policy covers, read what's excluded," he said. "Then read what's exactly covered. You'll be able to read what's covered quickly this way."

Under renters' insurance, personal property is usually covered by a loss by many things, including fire, windstorm, hail, vandalism, a collapse of a building, theft, freezing of plumbing and smoke.

There is also additional coverage that can be added to a policy.

One additional coverage is waterbed liability coverage. If a person's waterbed breaks and causes damage to the residence or others, the damage would be covered. Contents replacement cost is another coverage that can be purchased through some agencies.

"It costs a little extra, but it's well worth it," Bob Joyce, insurance agent with Farmers Insurance Group, said.

"If you were broken in and your TV that's three years old and cost you $300 was stolen, you'd probably only get $100 because of depreciation. With this, you'd get a new TV of the same kind and model for what a new TV would cost now. It's worth it if you ever do have a claim."

If a person has renters' insurance, making a list, taking photographs and video taping items within a residence could be helpful in case of a claim.

"It will help you and the adjuster to determine what the inventory was," Joyce said. "It helps the insured more than anything else because it gives you proof of what you have."

Vitamin E, prescription drug slow Alzheimer's disease

BOSTON - Researchers have found that ordinary vitamin E pills modestly slow Alzheimer's - the first time any treatment has been shown to change the course of the mind-robbing disease.

Patients with moderately severe Alzheimer's who took high doses of the vitamin in a two-year study delayed such major milestones as going into a nursing home by about

The study — the largest ever involving Alzheimer's also found that selegiline, or Eldepryl, a standard prescription drug for Parkinson's disease, does the same thing and seems to work about as well as vitamin E.

Both appear to help by protecting brain cells from the damaging effects of oxygen. Experts say this offers an important clue for finding other drugs that will be even more effective. Dr. John Growdon of Massachusetts General Hospital, one of the researchers, said he has begun routinely giving his Alzheimer's patients vitamin E, the cheaper of the two "This is not an overwhelming effect, but it is the first time we have seen long-term benefit," Growdon said. "I find that very encouraging. The study was directed by Mary Sano, an associate professor of clinical neuropsychology at Columbia University, and was published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

It found that both vitamin E and selegiline decreased Alzheimer's patients' loss of their ability to bathe, dress, handle money and do other routine chores by about 25 per-

"It opens up another encouraging avenue for the families of patients with the disease," said Edward Truschke, president of the Alzheimer's Association.

It also raises the possibility that vitamin E might also protect those who are still healthy from eventually getting the disease, although this has not been studied.

'The obvious question is, 'Should I take vitamin E?" Truschke said. "Because of the other health benefits it has, it probably can't hurt. But at the same time, there are some mild side effects. Anyone taking a new medication should consult with their physician."

Indeed, vitamin E is turning out to be a remarkably versatile nutrient.

Some believe it wards off cancer, and there is strong evidence that it is good for the heart.

Last year, one major study found that daily vitamin E reduces heart attacks by 75 percent in people who already have bad hearts. Another found evidence that foods rich in vitamin E - such as mayonnaise, margarine, salad dressings, vegetable oil and eggs - reduce women's risk of heart disease by two-thirds.

However, high doses of vitamin E can occasionally

The latest study was conducted on 341 men and women who lived outside nursing homes but needed supervision. They were randomly assigned to one of four daily treatments: 2,000 international units of vitamin E, 10 milligrams of selegiline, the two together or placebos, which are dummy pills.

The researchers measured the time it took for these people to reach one of four major milestones: admission to a nursing home, inability to perform basic daily activities, progression to severe dementia, or death.

They found that after an average of 440 days, at least one of these things had happened to the people taking

However, these events took 230 days longer to happen to those on vitamin E and 215 days longer for those taking

For reasons that the researchers could not explain, the patients using the two drugs together fared considerably

Their slide was delayed by just 145 days.

"It reminds us that two drugs are not necessarily better than one," Sano said.

sign-in desk greets student athletes when they come to the academic learning center at the Vanier Football Complex. The lobby resembles a doctor's office, except for the purple Powercat on the floor.

More than 100 athletes cross the Powercat on their way to the computer lab at the back of the building, or on their way to one of the 11 private tutoring rooms each night.

Every few minutes a stray voice drifts from one of the study rooms, but the atmosphere is generally quiet.

"On any night, we can have anywhere around 16 tutors in all subjects," Todd Wyant, academic counselor for football, said. "We concentrate heavily on math and English, but we have tutors for every subject."

Students always have an opportunity to work one-on-one with a tutor or surf the web in the lab. Study sessions are structured, so they do not become chatting sessions.

Nilijah McCoy, a football transfer from Dodge City Community College, said the center is a big advantage for student athletes.

"We didn't have a learning center like this at Dodge City," he said. "We didn't have tutors available anytime. We'd have to call for one, and there weren't that many available."

Kevin Page, director of academic affairs, said K-State had no teams that dropped in overall grade point average last semester. 'We get so much satisfaction from working with these kids," he said.

"We want them to be competitive in the classroom."

Page said students are not segregated by what sport they play. "We found it was more productive to have different sports interacting with one another," Page said. "We used to separate by sport, but we like to see athletes interacting."

When a student athlete arrives at the center, there is a board on the wall that details which subject will be discussed in each room. The tutors are usually graduate students.

"It's an advantage because there are always tutors and computers to use, it's quiet and it's structured," crew athlete Amanda Kiefer said. "You can't come if you aren't studying. You don't just get to hang around."

For some athletes, time at the center is required, but Kiefer is not required to log time at the center.

"It's just a great facility," she said. "It's incredibly well-equipped ... from personnel to equipment.

Students prepare to take magic carpet ride

HEATHER PERKINS

The International Student Center will hold the second annual Magic Carpet Extravaganza carpet sale from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday in the K-State Student Union Bluemont room.

Carpet Magic Extravaganza will feature handmade rugs from many different countries such as Persia, Afghanistan and Iran.

All proceeds from the carpet sales will go toward the expansion of the International Student

"Last year it was very successful. We made over $10,000 last year and we'd like to match and improve on that this year," Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, Everyone is encouraged to attend the event and show support for the International Student Center, she said.

"It's fun to see the carpets.

They are beautiful handmade carpets from around the world. They are exquisite works of art. encourage everyone to come and see the carpets and show their support for the International Student Center," Davis said.

The carpets are arranged to give visitors the feeling of being in a foreign land, she said.

"I was amazed at how he arranges the carpets. It's like walking into the market place. He hangs them everywhere. It's fun," Davis said.

Three carpets will be given away as door prizes on Sunday. First prize is valued at about

The event will be held for two days this year in hopes of attracting more visitors.

"Last year we only had it for one day. Buying a carpet is a big decision and people need time to think it over awhile. So we decided to have it for two days this year. It also will give more people more time to come look around," Davis said.

This space is for rent. More than 11,500 people want to see it. Call 532-6560 for details.

Defense: Women falsely accused instructor of rape

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND. Md. - Army trainees falsely accused a former drill instructor of rape so they wouldn't be prosecuted for having consensual sex, the defense charged Wednesday as the court-martial neared its end.

"Their motive to lie is to keep themselves out of trouble and to get him into trouble," said Frank Spinner, the lawyer for Army Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson.

guilty of violating regulations."

His remarks, which were not heard by jurors, came during a discussion about jury instructions.

Simpson is charged with raping six women a total of 19 times and could face life in prison if convicted of even one rape charge. He has already admitted to having consensual sex with 11 trainees and could face 32 years in prison for violating Army law. Closing arguments were set for

"He's not guilty of rape, and they are Thursday, after the judge instructs the six-member military jury.

Simpson, 32, is the central figure in the largest sex scandal in Army history. The investigation of sexual misconduct has resulted in criminal charges against 12 at Aberdeen Proving Ground and prompted a probe of Army bases worldwide.

Prosecutors contend Simpson raped the women while he was a drill sergeant at Aberdeen in 1995 and 1996, mostly by intimidating them with his 6-foot-4 size, his superior rank and real or implied threats of harm or punishment.

Military law states that constructive force, which might include threats or intimidation, is sufficient to warrant a rape charge. Physical force is not required.

In his only ruling on the subject Wednesday, trial judge Col. Paul Johnston agreed with the prosecution that force could include a threat of physical injury rather than the higher standard of great bodily harm, as the defense requested.

Governor to sign Winfield Veterans Home bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves planned a trip to Winfield today to sign into law a bill converting several buildings at Winfield State Hospital into a home for military veterans.

The bill-signing ceremony is scheduled for 1 p.m. at the war memorial in Winfield's Memorial Park

Graves and Rodger Steffen, chairman of Winfield Community Opportunities for Growth, are sched-

In case of inclement weather, the ceremony will be in the commons area of the Timber Creek Building on the hospital campus

The Legislature sent the bill to Graves on April 11 before taking a 2 1/2-week recess preceding next week's wrapup session. The bill, which passed the House, 124-0, and the Senate, 39-0, authorizes creation of the Kansas Veterans Home at Winfield, using many of the buildings of Winfield State Hospital, which is scheduled to be closed by the end of

The Legislature also has appropriated $1.7 million to begin converting the buildings into living quarters for veter-

Plans call for providing beds for 400 veterans when fully implemented.

The bill also authorizes the state to take over operation of a 60-bed nursing unit for veterans at the federal Veterans Affairs medical center in Wichita.

11-year-old boy mauled to death by 3 Rottweilers

NICOLE KIRBY

MILFORD - Eleven-year-old Christopher Wilson was mauled to death by three Rottweilers when he was trying to get on his school bus Thursday morning in Milford as schoolmates looked on in hor-

Christopher and Terrell Wilson, his eight-year-old brother, climbed a tree to avoid the dogs as the school-bus driver honked the horn to try to distract the dogs. But Christopher, ignoring the warnings of his brother, apparently thought the dogs had backed off and climbed down the tree.

Jeffrey and Sabine Davidson, who are the supposed owners of the dogs, were arrested on probable cause of involuntary manslaughter. They are being held without bond at Geary County Detention Center.

Two of the dogs were shot and killed by sheriff's deputies.

The third ran into a wooded area and was shot dead Thursday evening by a Kansas Highway Patrol sharpshooter, Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish said. Christopher is the son of Brian and Violet Wilson, Brian Wilson, a specialist first class with the Army, is stationed in Bosnia, but is being flown home immediately, said Deb Skidmore, Fort Riley public affairs officer.

"Hopefully, hopefully, we'll get him back tomorrow, but he's on his way already," Major John Stauter, Fort Riley public affairs officer, said.

Bus driver Kathy Roberg called for help, in addition to frantically honking the horn in attempt to scare off the dogs. "There was nothing she could have done differently," said Roberg's supervisor, Pamela Ballenger. "I wasn't ready for what I saw,"

Ballenger said after she went to the scene. "I wasn't prepared for it. The dogs had treated him like a rag doll." Neighbors said the dogs had terrorized the quiet little subdivision for years. "I came out, but it was too late," said Jeannette Day, a neighbor. "The dogs, they were all sitting around (the body). It was like they were gloating." The child's neighbors gathered near the scene of the attack, comforting each other and complaining about the dogs. Day said she was angry, and said the dogs had been trouble since their owners moved in a few years earlier.

"The dogs were always getting out and scaring the children, or they would bark a lot," she said.

Another neighbor, Learie Thompson, said the dogs charged him Thursday morning before the attack and sent him scrambling on top of his truck.

"I called for my wife, she closed the garage door and they ran off," he said. "Those dogs have always been vicious."

Fort Riley's chaplains, chain of command, counselors and family support group members were with the Wilson family Thursday.

In addition, social workers from USD

475 were at Milford Elementary, where Christopher attended class, to help the 16 students who witnessed the attack from the bus, Mary Devin, school superintendent, said.

Melissa Lemaster, 10, said Christopher was the type of child who liked everybody.

"He was friendly to everyone no matter what. I called him Zipper," she said. An autopsy is planned, and the Geary County Sheriff's Department's investiga-

Parking council raises price of reserved stalls

BRIAN SMOELLER

Parking Council voted 7-2 to increase the price of reserved parking stalls by $100.

All changes must be approved by Faculty Senate before enact-

The price increase is a result of a resolution initiated by a task force studying a survey about the parking problem on campus. The task force suggested the number of reserved stalls be reduced by attrition. The parking council suggested the reduction be accomplished by raising the price of the stalls annually. The price is $500 for 24-hour stalls and $400 for 10-hour stalls. In 1993-94, the price of reserved stalls was $175. Peggy Winkler, acting director of parking services, said the decrease in the number of reserved stalls over the past few years was not a result in increased fees, however.

"Most of the reserved stalls we get are terminations, retire-ments — that sort of thing," she said. "We haven't had anybody turn theirs in and say the price was the cause."

Faculty present at the meeting were strongly against the price change, citing that the University was taking back some of the salary given to them.

Suggestions ranging from increased shuttle services to reserved stalls for everyone on campus were raised as alternate

The parking council suggested that dispirited faculty with suggestions for a better way of phasing out reserved stalls should draw up resolutions and present them before Faculty Senate. The reserved stall price increase was not the only change the parking council made to the parking regulations. Other parking regulations approved included a change in the parking permits and respective lots next year. Permits will now have a letter, W. O. E. R. J or K. designating your status at K-State. The letters will have a corresponding information regarding available parking lots for that permit. The council also voted to change 24-hour reserved and 10hour stall signs from orange to reflective white.

Student Senate introduced a bill Thursday night to repeal the student health insurance plan it passed last month because premiums prices were incorrect.

Senate referred the bill to committee and will vote on it next Thursday

According to the bill passed March 6, the basic coverage plan deductible for a student and spouse was $1,512 for people 30 and younger and $2,174 for people 31 and older.

The totals on the bill intro-Thursday were increased to $1,992 for student and spouse and $2,864 for people 31 and older

The updated cost for the comprehensive plan for student and spouse was increased to $3,291 from $2,498 for people 30 and younger and $4,723 from $3,585 for people 31 and

Dianne Urban, student attorney at K-State legal services, said the totals in the original bill were lower than they actually should have been because the author did not add the cost of the student premi

Legos as architecture

a fourth grader at Eugene Field Elementary school smiles as Sara Matteson, a second grader, adds something to his lego castle Thursday afternoon.

Local children, students play at building community tudents at Eugene Field Elementary School Thursday played the role of junior Frank Lloyd Wrights and Julia Morgans as thousands of Lego building block pieces spilled on the gym floor slowly became pieced together.

Multi-colored jails, space ports, banks and stables - everything but law offices - formed the cluster of structures making up the Lego "global village."

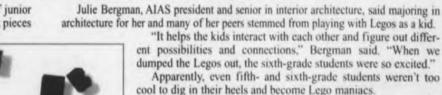

The day's activities were sponsored by the K-State chapter of the American Institute of Architecture Students, with the 150 gallons of Legos on loan from the University of Nebraska, which received them gratis from the Lego Group of the Netherlands. Shannor. Ryan, sophomore in interior architecture, sat among the piles of Legos, helping one of the third-grade students put gold pieces in the bank treasure chest. "I love working with kids," Ryan said, "even though I don't work with them much inside my major. I would hope to inspire some of

Keith Goslin, a third grader who rambled around scrounging for pieces to finish his alien creatures, said he's never seen so many Legos in his life. That seemed to be the consensus among all the students participating in the day's events. The idea for the afternoon-long activity was inspired by both school social science curriculum, stressing the idea of a global village, and a recent report from the Carnegie Foundation, "Building Community: A New Future for Architecture Education and Practice," which calls for civic engagement.

TOPEKA - People can now use the Internet to find out whether convicted sex offenders live near them.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation activated its World Wide Web page Thursday, which contains information about registered sex offenders and the state's most wanted fugitives. Attorney General Carla Stovall and KBI Director Larry Welch had a news conference to demonstrate the new Web page for reporters. They touted it as a way Kansans can easily find information about sex offenders.

Stovall said Kansas may be the first state in the nation to have such a site.

"I suspect other states will follow once I have a chance to boast to my colleagues," she said. "I think it will be a very successful site."

A 1994 law requires convicted sex offenders to register in their home counties once they leave prison. The crimes requiring registration are rape, indecent liberties with a child, indecent solicitation of a child, sexual exploitation of a child, aggravated sexual battery and some forms of criminal sodomy.

Stovall has urged newspapers across the state to run lists of registered sex offenders, but acknowledged she has had very little success, in part because editors are worried about the legal liability if their staffs make a mistake.

The Internet list includes 297 names - all those convicted of sex offenses after April 1994, when the law took effect, who have been released from prison. The state Supreme Court ruled last year that the state cannot require anyone convicted of sex offenses before then to register, a decision Stovall is appealing to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The KBI's Web site lists registered sex offenders by name, city, county and zip code. It provides an offender's address, age, sex and race. It also provides a picture.

The KBI plans to update the sex offenders' registration list every two Welch said the agency also plans to post names and photos of missing persons on the site. Plans are to have the names available on May 25.

AIR FORCE RETRIEVES WARPLANE WRECKAGE, NO SIGN OF PILOT.

EAGLE, Colo. — After spending the night on a snowy mountainside, a military recovery team Thursday gave up its effort, at least for now, to reach the wreckage of the A-10 Thunderbolt last seen three weeks ago.

The specially trained four-member team had been taken by helicopter up to the 11,500-foot level Wednesday, but snowy weather had made it impossible for them to climb the last 1,000 feet to the wreckage site.

This morning, after calling for help, team members were walking to a location where a helicopter could pick them up.

It was not immediately known when recovery efforts would resume at the site, about 15 miles southwest of Vail.

Earlier Wednesday, a special operations expert dangling from a cable was able to retrieve pieces of the Air Force plane that vanished during a training mission. But there was no sign of the pilot, Capt. Craig Button.

"I don't know if Captain Button was with the aircraft or was not with the aircraft, so I cannot talk about remains," Air Force Maj. Gen. Nels Running said Wednesday night. "The search continues."

U.N.INSPECTORS DISCOVER IRAQUI WEAPON PROGRAM.

LONDON — U.N. inspectors recently discovered a much more extensive Iraqii program to develop biological weapons than Iraq had admitted, the chief inspector said Thursday.

"It's hard evidence that they're not telling us everything," said Col. Terence Taylor, assistant director of the International Institute for Strategic Studies, who spent two weeks in Iraq this month leading a 21-member inspection team.

The inspectors found the Iraqis had an extensive program involving toxin weapons that Taylor said have a rapidacting effect like poison and can be used on the battlefield.

"The Iraqis had briefly mentioned the program to us, but what was new was the extent of the work which had been done on it," Taylor said, calling it, "far more extensive than they declared."

He refused to provide details about the toxin weapon because the inspection report is still being studied in New York.

The statement followed signs that some Security Council members are wavering on the question of whether Iraq is making an effort to comply with orders to make full disclosure of its weapons programs in order to get crippling sanctions lifted.

The surprise inspections at nine sites were timed to coincide with a presentation to the U.N. Security Council on April 18 by outgoing U.N. senior weapons inspector Rolf Ekeus, Taylor said.

Ekeus told the council that Iraq is still not cooperating fully with U.N. orders to dismantle all programs to create biological, chemical and nuclear weapons. He also believes Iraq is hiding scud missiles.

U.N. TEAM: RWANDAN REFUGEES HAVE FLED LARGEST CAMP.

"I'm absolutely shocked. There was a camp here four days ago. People were sick, hungry and too weak to walk. Where are they?" asked Filippo Grandi, an official with the U.N. refugee agency.

Anti-government rebels who have captured half of Zaire since September sealed off the area around the Kasese camp on Monday, after villagers living nearby went on a rampage because they blamed refugees for the murder of six locals. Zairian mobs — long resentful of Hutu refugees receiving food and other aid — looted U.N. warehouses and attacked aid workers, journalists and refugees.

There was no one left.

Greek philanthropy benefits Big Brothers, Big Sisters

As the wind carried the smell of cotton candy and hot dogs through the open arena of Hurlbert Hall at CiCo Park, water balloons sailed through the air, and children laughed.

The all-greek philanthropy, sponsored by Greek Affairs, began at 4 p.m. Thursday.

The philanthropy is for all children of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc. program, but is targeted at the children still on the waiting list, said Tami Carolan, Big Brothers/Big Sisters executive director.

Greek houses donate time and help to the philanthropy, said Tim Riemann, philanthropy coordinator and junior in agricultural economics and pre-law.

There are no proceeds from this event in the way of money, but there are benefits, Carolan said.

"This is the fourth year for the allgreek philanthropy," Riemann said. "This year is the second year for the carnival format. Before that, the greek houses adopted little brothers and little sisters and took them to a home basketball game. All four years, the philanthropy has been for Big Brothers/Big Sisters," he said.

About 18 greek houses provided activities such as a fishing pond, a moon walk, a water-balloon toss and free hot dogs and cotton candy for the more than 40 children at the carnival.

Another K-State philanthropy to support the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program is Beach Bash, sponsored by Alpha Gamma Rho and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternities, Carolan said.

Several houses also sponsor activities throughout the year for children on the waiting list.

"It's a good time for the kids to have fun and for us to get to meet people in other houses," said Lindsey Roy, Panhellenic Council public relations director and sophomore in advertising.

Greg Davis, junior in management information systems, said a good time was had by all who had anything to do with this event.

"The smiles on the children's faces make it all worth it," Davis said.

Each year, about 20 philanthropies are sponsored by greek houses to support local and national philanthropies, Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said.

Two years ago, a survey showed that greek philanthropies at K-State earned more than $60,000 per year with a total of 100,000 people-hours involved, Robel said.

"This is a great thing for the children," Ashley Youle, junior in public relations, said. "The children love the games and the cotton candy. The cotton candy is a favorite of both the children as well as the college students."

New commissioner targets transportation, environment

CORI HERBERS

Becoming more innovative, making government user friendly and consolidation between the county and the city are a few issues that Karen McCulloh, new city commissioner, will concentrate on during her term.

"I think too often we have to do things the way we've always done them. I've always said if you want something done its easier to get them done if you're working from the inside," McCulloh said.

An active member in several environmental boards, McCulloh said she is working on a project in conjunction with Earth Day.

McCullol

"I've been a very active member in a number of environmental boards. The project I'm currently working on is a fair in the mall that shows people why they should recycle," she said. "We are going to show products that are made from recycled materials."

The bike path study and parking on campus are a few of McCulloh's interest involving K-State.

"We will never have enough parking no matter what we do. I see a lot of students sharking the lot instead of walking to class. America is firmly wetted to its vehicle, so I would like to look at some public transportation possibilities for the city and K-State," she said.

McCulloh said she would like to see the development of a public transportation system for the city.

"We constantly talk about ways to involve people in activities whether it be older people or people who don't like to drive at night. We continue to encourage people to retire here as part of the economic development policy and we need public transportation," she said.

Communication between the University and the city is also a concern, McCulloh said.

"I would like to see the community avail themselves to some of the things on campus. For instance — the library. There are things we could do for business people in Manhattan. I would like to see the average citizen have more access to what's going on in government," she said. "The Internet and email is a chance for people to start writing again. It's awesome. I now get email from my kids everyday."

McCulloh is the assistant to the dean of the library and developmental officer at K-State.

"I'll be extremely busy with working on campus and my new position," she said. "But I'm looking forward to working with the commissioners and starting my new job."

McCulloh officially took office April 15 during a ceremony at the city commission meeting. of BIG POWER in the apple

Closing arguments heard in Army sex case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — A military jury began deliberating rape charges against a former Army drill sergeant Thursday after his lawyer argued that the six women trainees willingly had sex with him, then lied about it to protect their careers.

A prosecutor told the jury that Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson used the fear and intimidation that accompany rank to force the trainees to have sex.

Simpson, 32, is charged with raping six women a total of 19 times and could get life in prison if convicted of even one rape charge.

Simpson is the central figure in the biggest sex scandal in Army history. The scandal at Aberdeen has resulted in criminal charges against 12 soldiers at the base and prompted an investigation at Army installations worldwide.

"This is a case of the accused using his power, his easy access and his ability to control — an unscrupulous drill sergeant grossly misusing his position to force his sexual attentions on trainees," said Capt. Theresa Gallagher, the prosecutor.

Prosecutors contend Simpson raped the women in 1995 and 1996, mostly by intimidating them with his 6-foot-4-inch size, superior rank and Gallagher said Simpson frightened his trainees so badly that some were afraid to protest the rapes.

One 20-year-old private, who never told Simpson she did not want to have sex, was screaming at the top of her lungs inside of herself, Gallagher said.

"He manipulated his command.

KBI website offers peace of mind inding out if a convicted sex offender has taken up residency in your neighborhood is now as easy as surfing

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation has activated its Web page, which contains information about registered > sex offenders. By doing so, the KBI has made information that's already available easier to access. Instead of trekking to your local hall of records, you can simply point and click to find the information.

> The releasing of such records on the Internet is comparable to the publishing of the police blotter in the newspaper. Both are public record, the only difference being that they are being presented in different media.

The listing of sex offenders doesn't change the amount of information already available to the public. Rather, it is merely utilizing the technology we have today to provide more means of making public record accessible.

Some might contend that this leaves the sex offender susceptible to discrimination, despite the fact they've already served their time in

However, when these sex offenders were convicted of their crime, they also forfeited such rights as voting and bearing firearms.

When they infringed on the rights of others, they should have been prepared for their crime to follow them for the rest of their lives. They will be reminded of their act every time they fill out a job or credit application.

This extra reminder is a small price to pay for the peace of mind for local parents.

So what's the link between the two? Is it just a bond of physics, a struggle between energy and entropy to the death? Or is there a pattern in the forces at work, the fingerprint of God embedded in the system of the universe?

Everybody's got an opinion. You've seen them dueling about it on the opinion page for several weeks now. People are dug into their theological fortresses and filling the moats with sludge for defense against rhetorical siege, determined to fight to the end to keep their colors flying.

I'll tell you right off the bat: I don't pretend to know.

God doesn't talk to me in my sleep. I have had no religious epiphanies. His son never built (nor fixed) my hot rod. My life is free of divine intervention (except for, possibly, the draft of Kevin Lockett).

My parents, in their hunka hunka big wisdom, were careful to let me develop my own perspectives on a variety of issues while making sure I understood a basic sense of morality. (Or maybe they just ignored me and made sure I wouldn't come after them with a chainsaw — but doesn't sound as modern.) They didn't open my mouth and force feed me a belief I may not agree with - which I thank them for. During the Iranian hostage crisis I watched footage of a rally in Teheran, wondering in childish naivete how all those people could be so wrong. They claimed the word of God - but we all knew that we had God on our side. Whose side was He on, anyhow? Someone realized that day how the people around him could, if they wanted, color his beliefs radically. He didn't want to be indoctrinated or brainwashed - he wanted to make up his own mind. He didn't want to be told who or what God was - he wanted to find God for himself.

Easier said than done. It's not been an easy course to take. That particular facet has sunk at least one of my relationship so far, but I'd rather proclaim ignorance of the Almighty than hypocritically worship that which I don't believe. I think he'd prefer it that way.

And there's the rub - God has become commercial. People try to sell us faith on television or in other media or even on street corners. I just wish they'd stop shoving God in my face.

Look, if a truckload of Bibles (or Koran or Talmud, what have you) fell on top of me, it would inspire as much faith in me as being hit by a Samsonite with "Jehovah" engraved in it.

Pressure tactics don't work on America's youth anymore. We survived New Coke, we can take what you got without blinking. We want inspiration, not the Wrath of God. We've got AIDS, crackheads with Uzis, and mad cows to scare us; that job's taken. If you want to spark the flame in our hearts, talk to us, not at us.

I have a great many acquaintances with beliefs as diverse as they get. I don't care if you're Catholic, Lutheran, Jewish, Muslim, Buddhist, Hindu, what have you, it's inspirational.

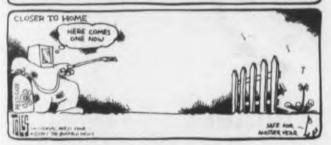

However, I'm not going to join a religion and adjust my beliefs to reflect the party line, so I like to scout 'em out ahead of time. I wish there was a checklist I could work through to go the other way around. "Do you believe in Jesus? If yes, turn to page 55; if not, turn to page 32." Sort of a "Choose Your Own Theology" book.

I've made progress on my journey - I have beliefs in a lot of things, now, but nothing I can fit into an established religion and say 'Yep, looks like I'm a (insert religion here)."

One of my favorite writers called religion "the most personal choice a person can make," and they deserve to make it themselves.

Cold, hard facts argue against death penalty

Let's see ... psychology, cultural anthropology, algebra ... oh yeah, can't forget gym class ... I'm trying to remember the classes I took here at K-State, freshman year, 1988-89, and it's a challenge.

I don't remember much. Or, should I say, I didn't retain much. I remember some general concepts from psych and anthropology, and I remember writing a paper (a paper?!) for gym. Algebra, on the other hand, I forgot before the damn final I learned about human rights and the idea of cruel and unusual punishment from Amnesty International, and what the death penalty was all about. I learned about living away from home, and living with a dorm full of geeks like me. I learned about falling in love for the first time, too.

CHAN JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail com ments to Jeff at (defcon l'Oksu.edu)

Well, I don't want to talk about old classwork or dorm-life. I don't want to talk about love. Not today Last February, the Kansas House of Representatives, in the words of the eversensitive Associated Press, "killed" a bill that would have repealed the state's death penalty law, signed into effect in 1994, and replaced the "hard 40" - at least 40 years in prison without chance of parole - as punishment for a list of intentional, premeditated murders.

These crimes include: murder committed during a kidnapping for ransom, contract murder, murder of a victim of rape or criminal sodomy, murder of a law enforcement officer, multiple murders, murder of any person by an inmate of a correctional facility and murder of a child under 14 in the commission of kidnapping with the intent to sexually assault.

This is an ugly list of crimes. But the punishment for these crimes - state mandated death - is as ugly, if not uglier. Don't stop reading. Here's why:

• The death penalty is not a deterrent against murder. A study of homicide rates in Oklahoma a year prior and the year following that state's first execution, which happened in 1990, revealed no deterrent effect. In fact, homicide rates increased after 1990. Nationwide, death penalty states have a median average murder rate of about 7.1, while states without have a median average of around 3.6.

In the mid-'80s, both Texas and Florida, two stalwart death penalty states, had the highest number of executions and prisoners on death row. Both states also had the highest murder rates in the country. Why is this? It's simple.

Most murders occur spontaneously or under the influence of drugs. These "crimes of passion" preclude the very idea of deterrence. And those murders that are planned are generally committed by professionals who can evade the law, or those who expect to get caught.

In either case, the death penalty fails as a deterrent, but succeeds in pulling the wool over the public's eyes. For it's part, the Kansas law seems to emphasize premeditation as a criteria, although no executions have occurred since 1994 to test that

 The death penalty is expensive. Capital murder trials are longer than non-death penalty murder trials. More briefs are filed, and more judicial procedure is required.

This is all prior to and during the trial, where the most expense is incurred, and does not take into account the appeal process which can last decades.

Incarceration is cheaper. A study done by Duke University in 1993 showed that North Carolina's death penalty cost $2.16 million per execution over the cost of a non-death penalty case ending in life

In 1993 the Attorney General of Texas acknowledged that it cost three times as much to carry out a death sentence as it did to imprison for 40 years.

Closer to home, the Kansas State Board of Indigent Defense Services determined in the late '80s that the death penalty would cost Kansas $1 million per case. The cost of incarcerating inmates in the Kansas penal system is around $12,000 per year, whereas the average cost of a capital murder trial plus three appeals lies around $1.8 million. • The innocent are not necessarily safe from the death penalty. A study in the Stanford Law Review documented 350 cases of persons wrongly convicted of capital crimes since 1900. Of these, 25 were executed, 7 died in prison and another 19 were reprieved within 72 hours (some within minutes) of exe-

Others spent decades languishing in prison. Fifty-five of these cases took place in the 1970s, and another 20 between 1980 and 1985.

Since 1972, 65 persons have been released from death row because of their innocence. As of November 1996, eight others were being investigated as possible innocence cases.

Death is absolute punishment. Final. No appeals. No reversals.

It is irrevocable punishment carried out by a criminal system that is, by its own admission, far from perfect.

I'll continue this argument next week by pointing out other information I've learned, like how the death penalty violates both the Eighth and 14th Amendments to the Constitution.

Leaking package found at B'nai B'rith, harms 14

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Authorities cordoned off a two-block area around the international headquarters of B'nai B'rith Thursday and quarantined more than 100 workers after a suspicious, leaking package was discovered in its mailroom

FBI spokeswoman Susan Lloyd said the package contained a red liquid in a petri dish that was emitting a foul odor. The petri dish reportedly had the word "anthrachs" on it - an apparent misspelling of anthrax, the deadly bacterial disease

The dish also bore the word, "yersinia," which is the bacterium that causes Bubonic plague. Initial tests on the material, however, turned up no evidence of a serious contaminant.

"We have this container that looks like a petri dish (with) a couple of scientific terms on it It could be strawberry jello, it could be beef bouillon; so we don't know at this point." Lloyd said.

At least one man complaining of dizziness was taken to George Washington University Hospital.

Barry Simon, the hospital's chief of infectious diseases, said field tests on the material showed it was not anthrax.

Fourteen people, including a dozen emergency personnel, were hosed down at the site with a water and chlorine solution to decontaminate them, author-

Officials said 108 people who were working in the building of the Jewish service organization were being quarantined while tests are completed on the suspicious material. A B'nai B'rith employee, Dan Joseph, said those in the building included as many as five children, ages 5 to 13, who had accompanied their parents on a day when parents were encouraged to bring school-age children to work with them. "Everyone is okay," Joseph said. Everyone is a little anxious but calm. Everyone is holding up pretty well."

Hazardous materials teams from the FBI and the fire department cordoned off the building. After several hours, a convoy of FBI and police vehicles took the package to the nearby Bethesda Naval Research Facility in suburban Maryland for testing and analysis.

Sports types should learn to appreciate female athletes

Recently someone complimented one of my

I thought that was all fine and dandy until they felt the need to add "yeah, I never knew girls knew so much about sports."

Normally this would not have bothered me. After all, I have been writing sports for two semesters now and following it since I was old enough to turn on the television.

I am a sports goddess. And for the most part, if we are talkin' sports, I know of what I speak.

For some reason though, this remark rang through my mind with all the silence of Saturday afternoon of football in this knuckle dragger," wondered.

Manhattan. "Who is

"And why is he so ignorant?"

Perhaps he had not been informed that women are no longer clueless when it comes to sports, that we are involved more today than ever before.

ksu.edu)

We are franchise owners, we are coaches and we are players.

Though we may have had to fight for our spots in press boxes and starting lineups, we are

You can not ignore the effect we have on the "old boys club."

But before I start sounding too much like "I am woman hear me roar," let me explain.

No longer is it true that men are far superior physically to women. In fact, in the next millennium I think women will be competing head to head with men in some sports, rather than side by side.

I realize women will likely never play football in the NFL, but in things like track and basketball, well, boys, watch your backs.

The other day, I caught the results of this year's Boston Marathon. The men's finisher crossed the line in 2:10:33, while the women's crossed a mere 16 minutes later.

While this may seem like an eternity, it is not. The gap is closing. Don't look over your shoulders - we are liable to pass you.

For people to appreciate and respect women's sports the way they do men's, a change in mind set must take place.

I do not know how many times I have heard "women's sports are boring," or, "why are those girls so big? It's not normal.'

People must first get past this opinion that if women are athletes, somehow they are unfeminine. It is a moronic double standard that plagues society's opinion of female athletes even today.

On the contrary, female athletes are role models to many youngsters these days. They are role models because they have what it takes to make it as professional athletes. If these women wanted a job based on beauty, they would have been cheerleaders.

Recently, with the addition of the Women's National Basketball League, athletes are finally getting some of the publicity and respect they deserve Tipoff of the WNBA is scheduled for June 21. And with it, I expect a wave of positive publicity to follow and hopefully some big attendance numbers.

With coaches like Cheryl Miller, sister of Indiana Pacer Reggie Miller and one of only 11 women in the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame, and players like Rebecca Lobo, Olympic gold medalist and 1995 college player of the year, the Senior wide receiver dismissed from football team

KIM BRUNA

K-State wide receiver Andre Anderson was dismissed from the K-State football team after serving the team for three seasons, spending time on the field as a tail back and special teams.

Anderson, the only returning receiver from a year ago, was dismissed on Tuesday shortly after he was placed as the No. 1 wide receiver on the spring depth charts. Anderson had apprently violated a team rule.

On Tuesday, K-State head coach Bill Snyder said Anderson would not be allowed to return to the team under any circumstances. Anderson, however, said he thought his dismissal was just a temporary thing.

"That's deep. That's just too deep," he said. "I'm just dismissed. I'm not off that team. A lot of people say that I'm off the team, but I'm still a member of that

Snyder was not available for comment on the current situation but did confirm Anderson was dismissed from the team and his name was removed from the ros-

Rumors abound about the dismissal of Anderson, the most prominent of which is he was caught with a gun in his car, but Anderson refuted that hearsay.

"No, no, no. That's off. That's way off," he said. "There's no truth there whatsoever. There's a lot of rumors out there.

Anderson is not new to trouble in his football days with K-State. Anderson failed a drug test in 1995 before the KU game and did not play. Anderson said he was about to leave the team then, too, but decided to had indeed been in trouble in the past, often violating team rules. As a result, Anderson's scholarship was pulled before the start of spring practices.

Anderson said he was working earnestly with his attorney to try and remedy the situation, and said he was prepared to make a statement in a few days.

"My attorney told me to keep quiet so we get all these things worked out," Anderson said.

Anderson came to K-State from West Palm Beach, Fla., where he was named to the 3A first-team all-State team as a senior after rushing for 1,384 yards and 28 touchdowns on 126 carries.

As a junior, Anderson, who came to K-State as a running back but switched to wide receiver in 1995, finished third on the team last year with 23 reception, including five touchdown catches, which ranked him second on the squad.

Cats fall to Oklahoma

The final chapter read much like the whole story for the K-State women's tennis team Thursday at the Big 12 Tournament in Austin,

The Cats continued its string of losses with a 5-1 loss to Oklahoma in the first round of the tournament. The loss stretched the Cats losing streak to 11 matches.

Much like the rest of the duals in the season, the Cats had very close matches throughout the singles lineup.

The only win for the Cats came at the No. 1 singles spot, where junior Yana Dorodnova snapped a personal seven-match losing streak with a victory over Kate Dunlevy.

Just like in their last match, Dorodnova and Dunlevy battled back and forth in a close, three-set contest. Just like in their first meeting, Dunlevy jumped out to the early start, taking the first set in a

But once again, Dorodnova battled back in the second, taking the set 6-3. However, this time Dorodnova provided a different ending in the third, taking the set in another tiebreaker, 7-6.

The Cats' other three matches came at the two, three and five

At the No. 2 singles spot, junior Lena Piliptchak fell in three sets to Megan Reci. After dropping the first set 6-4, Piliptchak came back to take the second 6-4. Ricci stormed back in the third to take the set 6-1. After jumping out to a 3-1 start, Piliptchak lost her last

At the No. 3 spot, Karen Nicholson was matched up again against Sooner Stephanie Sajbet. In their last meeting, Nicholson picked up the only win for the Cats with a 6-7, 6-4, 6-1 win over Sajbet.

Once again, the match between the two was stretched to three sets. But this time Sajbet who came out on top with a 4-6, 6-1, 6-0 win. Also stretching her match to three sets was junior Chris Schulte.

After losing the first set 5-7 to Jennie Hamilton, Schulte battled back in the second to even the score at 6-6. Schulte took control in the tiebreaker to take the set 7-6. Hamilton would prevail in the third, taking the set and the match 6-1.

Just like in their previous match against the Sooners, both Dinah Watson and Nikki Lagerstrom lost their matches in straight sets, Watson fell to Angela Stroup 6-2, 6-1. Lagerstrom finished up her collegiate career with a 6-0, 6-1 loss to Kristin Gullford.

The doubles portion was not played once the Sooners won five matches to seal the victory.

K-State looks to nab victory from hunrgy Iowa State team

Eleven losses in a row and you go from contender to pre-

The pretender label is what the K-State baseball team has after being swept this past week at Baylor, dropping their record to 5-19 in the Big 12 conference, 22-21 overall. "We're just trying to win a ball game right now," said head coach Mike Clark. We have no chance at the tournament. At 11-19 you don't make the post-season.' A sweep of the series this weekend with last place Iowa State and the final series at Kansas would be needed to give the Wildcats those 11 wins in the conference.

After the disappointment at Baylor, the Cyclones' series this weekend looms as a chance to get back on the winning track.

Iowa State comes into the contest Saturday as the only team in the Big 12 with a poorer record than K-State.

"They're hungry for a win too, so it should be a good series," Clark said. The Baylor series showed what the season has been like for the Cats. Get an early lead, then watch it disappear. "It makes it hard when you need to score 12 runs a game and then lose," Clark said. "That's the way it's been the past strikes, but that's been inconsistent.

Relief pitcher David Johnson, whose record fell to 1-2 against Baylor, pointed to himself and his recent performance as letting the Cats down.

"I pitched great against Texas A&M and throw bad against Kansas," he said. "I thought I had that fixed and I threw well against Texas Tech, but then I throw badly against Baylor. Hopefully I can throw well this weekend.'

With the Big 12 tournament out of reach, Clark said he might bring in some of the lesser used players to give them some experience, but not if it cost them games. "We'll give some of the players coming back some playing time," he said. "But we're going to try and win a game. We're going to stay positive and keep working. We still have a chance to win 32-34 games and have a good season." The highest win total in K-State baseball history is 35 back in 1974, when the Cats were 35-19 after the Big 8 Tournament.

The highest win total under Clark's reign is 34, when K-State went 34-24 and tied for fifth in the Big 8. If the Cats were to win the remainder of their games, they would finish with 34 wins.

Other positive notes coming out of the Baylor series is despite the recent Wildcat pitching woes, seniors Eric Yanz and Mickey Blount and junior David Meares were pointed out by Clark as being recent surges.

"Yanz is throwing well lately. He kind of got roughed up a little bit, but he said is arm was tired, which is understandable since he's thrown a lot lately," he said. "He should be ready for this weekend, though. Meares is a guy who's been throwing well and so is Blount." Junior shortstop Heath Schesser drilled his 14th home run of the season, placing himself in a tie for first with Rob Holder for the most homers by a Wildcat in a seaso Schesser increased his average to .399, which ranks eighth in the Big 12. Senior Scott Poepard is 14th with a .378 The first pitch of the doubleheader, which will be aired

ROTC sponsors race in memory of alumnus

TAMARA PETERSON

The Air Force ROTC of K-State will sponsor its second Grimm Memorial Scholarship Run at 11 Saturday morn-

The run is in honor of Capt. William Grimm, graduate of K-State, who was a navigator on an AC-130. He was deployed to the Persian Gulf as part of Desert Storm.

On January 31, 1991, Capt. Grimm's aircraft, the Spirit 03, was shot down while flying a support mission. No survivors were found. He received the Purple Heart and the Silver Star awards.

"Anyone at any age can still enter the race up till one hour before the race at 10 a.m. If you're under 18, a parent must sign the wavier for insurance purposes," Heather Fraass, current commander of Arnold Air Society, said.

The starting line of the five-mile run is at the south-east parking lot on K-State campus. The race course is marked out over campus sidewalks and roads.

This year the course will be marked blue arrows on the sidewalk so that the runners know which direction to go. So that no one gets hit by a car, campus security will be there at the race, unlike last year. This year's race is more coordinated than last year," Kendall Okeson, public affairs officer of AAS, said.

Since the race crosses Claflin and Denison two times each, AFROTC urges runners to have fun and keep safety the main priority.

Air Force and Army ROTC will race for the traveling trophy sponsored by the AAS. The top four runners from each branch will total up their times. The branch with the lowest average total time wins the trophy.

Medals will also be awarded to the first four men to finish, along with the first four women.

"I plan to run in the race," Okeson said. "I hope the challenge for the traveling trophy becomes a tradition between the Air Force and Army

K-State named one of best college buys

Being named one of America's 100 best college buys can be added to the ever-growing list of K-State bragging points.

K-State was informed Wednesday that they were included in the list of 100 schools

"The Student Guide to America's 100 Best College Buys" profiles schools that are the highest rated academically, but have the lowest total costs for a college year.

Considered in the study were 1,800 colleges and universities. The list was compiled by Institutional Research and Evaluation in Gainesville, Ga.

None of the schools had to pay a fee to be considered. The results were based on specific requirements, including opportunities for students and financial assistance. President Jon Wefald said the recognition highlights what K-State has to offer. He noted that quality education and affordability were the main reasons he felt K-State was selected. "High quality students and top-notch faculty, and sense of community that we have here at K-State - put all that together and I can see why they chose K-State one of the top-100 best buys," Wefald said. The guide will be sold at bookstores throughout the country to potential students and parents to assist them in their selection process. The guide includes information on each school such as cost, majors and information on campus life.

Other schools included in the 100 best were the University of Kentucky, Ohio University and Florida State University. Big 12 schools included were Baylor University, the University of Kansas, Oklahoma State University and Texas A&M University.

Senate OKs chemical weapon ban

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - In a foreign policy triumph for President Clinton, the Senate voted Thursday night to ratify a treaty designed to ban chemical weapons around the globe.

The vote was 74-26, seven more than the two-thirds needed for approval. All 45 Democrats voted in favor of the measure, while majority Republicans were split.

The vote capped an arduous lobbying campaign by the White House, culminating in a last-minute letter to Majority Leader Trent Lott in which Clinton said he would be prepared to withdraw from the treaty if it resulted in the spread of chemical weapons technology, as some critics said it

"It is a close call," Lott, R-Miss., said of his own decision to support the pact, an endorsement the White House had courted ardently. "I believe the U.S. is marginally better off with it than without it."

In a late night appearance before reporters. Clinton hailed the vote as an example of "America working as it should, Democrats and Republicans together."

"The chemical weapons convention truly was made in America, under two of my predecessors," he said. "It is right for America. Now it has been ratified in America. And it will make our future more secure."

The treaty, opposed by many conservatives, bans the use, development, production or stockpiling of all chemical warfare agents and requires the destruction of existing stockpiles over the next decade.

It has been signed by 164 nations thus far, and ratified by 75. With or without American ratification, the pact will take effect on April 29.

Opponents, led by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., argued the treaty is unverifiable and would open the United States to danger from nations such as Libya, North Korea and Iraq that refuse to sign it.

"The truth of the matter is it won't do a thing in the world to help the situation. It's not a comprehensive ban,"

Helms said.

But supporters noted that the United States was already in the process of destroying its own stockpiles of poison gas and said the only

In the hours leading to the final vote, the administration allies succeeded in knocking several provisions from the ratification measure that the White House had strongly opposed.

One would have barred American ratification until Iran. Iraq, Syria and other so-called rogue states had acceded to the pact. It was stripped out on a vote of 71-29.

Another, requiring Clinton to bar inspectors from certain unfriendly nations, was deleted, 56-44.

HOW KANSAS SENATORS VOTED AND WHY

WASHINGTON (AP) - The two Kansas Republicans in the Senate split on ratification of the chemical weapons treaty, with Sen. Pat Roberts endorsing the pact and Sen. Sam Brownback voting against.

Roberts, who was undecided until a few hours before the final vote Thursday, said he came to the conclusion that the treaty will help ensure a "secure and stable world."

"A Marine general I respect made a convincing argument when he told me, 'Our armed forces will be better served with this treaty than without it," said Roberts, a former Marine.

The treaty bans the development, production or stockpiling of all chemical warfare agents and requires destruction of existing stockpiles over the next decade. The Senate ratified the treaty on a 74-26 vote.

Brownback was lobbied to vote for the treaty by former President Bush and both former Kansas senators, Bob Dole and Nancy Kassebaum Baker, all of releasing a letter from Clinton in which the president said he was prepared to withdraw from the treaty if other countries used it to transfer materials that could be used to develop Earlier in the chemical weapons.

Clinton said he also would withdraw from the accord if it ends up undermining a 30-nation pact that imposes export controls and other measures against proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

"I consider it an ironclad commitment from the president of the United States to the Senate," Lott said.

The White House viewed Lott's vote as pivotal in the ratification struggle. Yet within the Republican Party, the Mississippi lawmaker, who has presidential ambitions, was buffeted by conflicting forces.

The treaty commands huge support in public opinion polls, and was negotiated during the administrations of Presidents Bush and Reagan. On Wednesday, former GOP presidential candidate Bob Dole announced his

On the other hand, GOP foes include not only Helms but Jack Kemp, who was Dole's running mate last year, as well as several former defense secretaries during Republican administrations.

In the past several weeks, the White House has grappled first with Helms' initial refusal to permit the treaty to come to the floor, then with the changes that critics demanded in the ratification legislation.

In an agreement that all sides insisted had nothing to do with the actual ratification, the way was cleared for a vote on the pact when the White House agreed with Helms on longstalled legislation to overhaul the nation's foreign policy bureaucracy.

In follow-up negotiations with Lott and others, the White House signed off on 28 separate changes.

Among them were a provision requiring search warrants for inspections conducted in this country, and another that preserves the right of authorities to use tear gas in certain circumstances, such as rescuing downed American pilots.

But defense attorney Frank J. Spinner said Simpson's accusers willingly had sex with him, then lied because they didn't get the favorable treatment they had expected, or they did not want their reputations sullied, or they did not want to be prosecuted for consensual sex, a violation of Army rules.

He said the women could have reported any sexual misconduct, or, if they were fearful, could have gone absent without leave.

"If you convict Sgt. Simpson, you'll be sending a message out to the Army that no drill sergeant is safe," the attor-

Convicting Simpson of rape would allow trainees to say to their commanders: "Drill sergeant, you tell me to run up that hill, and I'm going to say you're sexually harassing me," Spinner warned.

Simpson has admitted to having consensual sex with 11 trainees and could get 32 years in prison for those and five other acknowledged sex offenses.

Military law states that physical force isn't required to prove rape; constructive force, which can include threats or intimidation, is sufficient.

Court-martial rules require four of the six jurors to agree on any guilty verdict.

Simon said the AIAS students saw this opportunity as a way to do some community service and work with children.

Although Simon thinks the activity might inspire some kids to pursue architecture, she said it is perhaps even more important the students be introduced to building since many more of them will become clients.

"Architecture is rarely taught in schools," Simon said. "We're trying to stress to the elementary students that they should work collaboratively something that is important for archi-

Student Senate also introduced bills to repeal legislature involving Student Publications Inc. because they were deemed unconstitutional.

The Student Publication Equipment Fee Budget is being reviewed because the original bill included $7,500 for repairing the air conditioning and ventilation for the main computer room.

According to the new bill, the chang-

The fliers said it all, "You wanted the best, you got the second best."

Smack rocked Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon like it's never been rocked before

This was a rock 'n' roll experience, folks. Smack paid tribute to Kiss in a way that only Kiss themselves could have.

Review

Chance was packed beyond belief for this one. I have never seen it that packed in the many shows I have seen there.

Smack consists of Paul "Andrew Sample" Stanley on vocals and rhythm guitar, Gene "Dave Boomer" Simmons on bass and vocals, Ace "Doug Minner" Frehley on lead guitar and vocals, and Peter "Eric Melin" Criss on drums and vocals.

There was a makeshift curtain covering the front of the stage so the crowd couldn't see the band setting up beforehand, thus keeping the mystery intact.

Smack launched into the opening chords of "Deuce" and the curtain came down. Everyone went nuts.

Their costumes and makeup were exact, even down to the tattoos. On stage, they even referred to themselves as Gene. a T. Paul, Ace and Peter.

It was just like watching Kiss, I tell you! Not only did they play the more recognizable hits, like "Strutter" and "Detroit Rock City," but they also played more obscure Kiss songs, like "Room Service" and "Parasite."

Having never seen Kiss before, but always wanting to, this was the best.

I was amazed at how much they sounded like Kiss as far as vocals go. Boomer's vocals mirrored the real Gene, and Sample's vocals matched Stanley's.

In true Kiss fashion, Boomer did the inevitable. Right before "God Of Thunder," the band cleared the center of the stage, and Boomer spit fake blood just like Gene Simmons. It was a glorious sight.

Melin had Criss' drum solos down pat straight from Kiss' live albums.

Minner even imitated Frehley's solos to Boomer had Simmons' tongue thing

And Sample even had Stanley's stage moves down.

The show was even more amazing due to the mass participation from the crowd. Sample got the crowd clapping and cheering and singing along, which added to the image of a Kiss show.

Most of his interaction with the crowd was taken from Kiss live shows, too.

Smack transformed "New York Groove" into "Manhattan Groove," which was cool.

Towards the end of the show, Melin emerged from behind his drum kit and sang the classic "Beth," complete with roses for the ladies in the front, just like Criss.

My goal for the night was to get one of the roses, and I did. They ended the evening with the one

Kiss song everyone knows, "Rock And Roll All Nite All four band members traded verses, and Sample had the crowd take over on a

When I say gone, I mean gone. This was their final performance, and if you missed it, then you are out of luck. I wish they could have had Boomer spitting fire like Simmons and the cool explosions like Kiss has, but you can't really pull that off in Chance. Oh well. It was still amazing. I wanted the best, and you know what? I got the best with Smack.

KISS unleashes greatest hits

The Beatles are the only band in rock 'n' roll history to have more gold albums than these legends. Their reunion tour set all kinds of attendance and fastest-sell-out records around the world. They wear makeup and elaborate costumes This is their 29th album.

That's right, I'm talking about the one, the only, Kiss. On April 8, Mercury Records released "Greatest Kiss," a sixteen-track collection of some of their greatest songs. All of them have been digitally remastered from their 17-record back catalog on Casablanca Records. It covers only the era when Kiss wore makeup, so there's none of their material from the '80s and '90s on here. Just the classic stuff. 'Greatest Kiss" is a good mix of their more rockin' songs and their slower ballads.

The record kicks off with "Detroit Rock City," one of my all-time favorite songs, and then goes into the ballad "Hard Luck Woman."

When I popped this compact disc in the player, I was singing along and playing air guitar in my room. I couldn't help myself, and neither will you. Kiss just does that to you.

I forgot how almost all Kiss songs are about girls, until I listened to this. Out of the sixteen songs on the disc, about half are about girls or sex. Or both.

I want to know why they put songs like "Two Sides of the Coin" and "Flaming Youth" on here. I don't even remember those songs from when I was a kid.

"Black Diamond" and "God Of Thunder" should have replaced those, I think. Those are legendary Kiss songs.

Songs like that may have been left out, but they don't neglect the classics like "Strutter," and, of course, "Rock And Roll All Nite." That is a good thing And it wouldn't be a Kiss greatest hits compilation without Peter Criss crooning "Beth." I especially liked how instead of putting the original studio version of "Shout It Out Loud" on here, they put a live version of it on instead. The new live recording was recorded in Detroit at Tiger Stadium this summer at the kickoff date of their reunion tour.

It's great, because not only is it Kiss live, but you get to hear the monstrous crowd singing along and the explosions going off in the background

This is a great collection for the person just now getting into Kiss, or the longtime Kiss fan that wants their favorite songs on one disc.

My only complaint is that they didn't put 'Black Diamond," "Hotter Than Hell," or even the trademark "God Of Thunder" on here.

It's not a true greatest hits collection without those. Kiss' songs aren't that long either, so both those songs could have fit in addition to the sixteen already on the CD.

THE REAL KISS members released their 29th album, a greatest hits

NUMBER ONE WITH A BULLET

The New York Times reported in November on the project by the Picatinny Arsenal in Rockaway Township, N. Y., to create more environmentally friendly bullets while still maintaining the bullets' killing power. Three years ago, the federal government closed a nearby firing range because spent, leaded bullets were contaminating the soil so as to endanger people and animals.

Opening arguments in McVeigh trial focus on victims, Waco connection

DENVER - Seething with rage against his own government, Timothy McVeigh blew up the Oklahoma City federal building in a twisted plot to spark a second American revolution. a prosecutor said in opening statements Thurs-

"McVeigh liked to consider himself a patriot," Assistant U.S. Attorney Joseph Hartzler said. "Our forefathers did not fight innocent women and children. ... They didn't plant bombs and run away wearing earplugs." Jurors listened grim-faced as Hartzler, who has multiple sclerosis, leaned forward in his TRIAL TO END TERROR wheelchair and spoke softly about the deadliest act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

"It was an act of terror intended to serve selfish political purposes," Hartzler said. "The truck was there to impose the will of Timothy McVeigh on the rest of America ... by murdering innocent men, women and children in hopes of seeing blood flowing in the streets of America.'

But in equally forceful terms, McVeigh attorney Stephen Jones declared in his opening statement: "My client is innocent."

Jones accused the government of trying to elevate McVeigh's political beliefs - which Jones said many share - into a motive for mass murder. And he lashed out at scientists at the beleaguered FBI lab for practicing forensic prostitution by slanting scientific work in favor of the prosecution.

Making no effort to soften the emotional power of the bombing, he began by spending six minutes reading off the names of each of the 168 people killed when the April 19, 1995, truck bomb tore apart the nine-story building.

As Jones solemnly read the names, bombing victim's relatives quietly cried in their special section of the packed second-floor

"It was upsetting," Marsha Kight, whose grown daughter died in the blast, said later. "It tore my heartstrings.

McVeigh, wearing a plaid shirt and khakis, showed little emotion in court. He leaned forward to listen, sometimes resting his head on his folded hands as the prosecutor portrayed the 29-year-old Gulf War veteran as a selfish, deluded coward.

Hartzler said that on the day of the bombing McVeigh was wearing a T-shirt that bore the Thomas Jefferson quote: "The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants."

Hartzler contended that McVeigh's hatred of the federal government was fueled by what he saw as the government slaughter of innocents at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas, two years to the day before the McVeigh was arrested on traffic charges 90 minutes after the explosion, and when federal agents searched his car they found slips of statements quoting "The Turner Diaries," a 1978 fictional account of an attack on a federal building that is eerily similar to the Oklahoma City bombing. Hartzler said the book "served as a blueprint.

McVeigh planned the bombing for months, the prosecutor said, and hoped it would rival the American Revolution's first shots, which also were fired on an April 19 - in 1775.

"He envisioned he would bring liberty to this nation," Hartzler said. "Well, this was not just talk for McVeigh. He was ready for action. He knew from literature how to make a bomb and how to get the ingredients."

In a new revelation, Hartzler said federal agents later found a file in his sister's computer that "McVeigh obviously wanted them to read." It was marked "ATF READ."

"You'll see the chilling words, 'All you tyrannical mother fuckers will swing in the wind some day for your treasonous actions against the Constitution. ... Die, you spineless, cowardice bastards. Hartzler said McVeigh and co-defendant

Terry Nichols, who is to be tried later, "became friends in part because they both shared a distaste for the federal government."

Jones' presentation offered none of the elaborate theories of international conspiracy that he had floated before the trial. Instead, he focused on what he said were the shortcomings of the government's evidence and the contradictions among witnesses, including those who said they saw McVeigh rent the truck used in the bombing.

Jones also assailed the prosecution's key witness, Michael Fortier, alleging he was a drug user and drug seller. Jones contended the FBI tipped off Fortier in advance about a search of his house so no drugs would be found.

He said Fortier repeatedly said McVeigh was innocent until he "perceived he would be next" to be arrested.

► RESIDENTS GATHER, LIGHT CANDLES to recall memories of 11-year-old mauled by rottweilers.

Residents of Milford came together Saturday night to grieve for the loss of Christopher Wilson, an 11-year-old boy who was killed by rottweilers Thursday.

They met in Milford City Park, where about 100 people huddled together under a park shelter and lit candles in memory of Christopher. Christopher's friends from school and his Cub Scout troop clustered tightly around Stewart Smith, Milford Congregational Church minister, in the center of the crowd. Smith asked the people to speak about Christopher.

"Some people need to say things, and some people need to cry, and this is the place to do that," he said.

A woman broke the silence. "You know, Chris always smiled," she said. One of his friends told the group, "Chris, he was a good friend and good classmate, and, well, that should never have happened."

Another classmate said, "We all know that we can't do anything, but we can be together, and we can cry together."

With their words, the townspeople painted a picture of a young athlete who was friendly, helpful and giving. Smith then called for a moment of silent meditation, and the people bowed their heads as geese honked overhead and dogs barked in the distance.

The mourners sang a round of "Kumbaya," then the voice of a woman reading a poem rose over the tears and sniffles.

"Think of him as living in the heart of those he touched, for nothing loved is lost, and he was loved so much," she concluded.

The people dispersed into smaller groups, comforting each other and discussing

Christopher's life and death. Nathaniel Samuel Burnes Jr. said he was too shy to speak in front of the whole crowd, but Christopher had been a good friend of his. The boys sat two desks apart in class and played ball

"He was a good person and was always a good sport," Nathaniel said, with tears welling in his eyes. "He was nice, and he shared things with us

Beverly Greenwood also had Christopher in class. She was his teacher last year, and she was there when the children who witnessed the attack from the school bus arrived at school.

They had been ushered to the library, she said, where social workers from the school district helped them as much as possible.

The candlelighting ceremony was organized by Christopher's Cub Scout troop leader, Joe Varner. "It just helped the healing process for the kids," he said. "I couldn't do anything else, so I figured this would help bring the community together."

And it did bring Milford, a town temporarily crippled by grief, together. "When you live in a community this small, you're all one," said Dave Walthers, Milford resident and father of one of Christopher's classmates.

Committee fine tunes Laramie resolution

The Governmental Relations Committee of Student Senate fine tuned a resolution opposing the closing of Laramie Street at its meeting

Sunday night. Patrick Carney, committee chair, explained Manhattan Christian College's appeal to the city for a planned unit development that would close Laramie and make it part of the MCC campus.

He explained the results of the traffic study MCC commissioned last year, which found that traffic doubled and almost tripled on nearby Leavenworth and Fairchild streets

14th and 16th streets was temporarily closed

Carney's report, which was based on information given to the city by MCC, showed MCC's plans to landscape and build in order to create a campus-like feel for students while increasing their safety when crossing between the north and south sides of

The report also showed the surrounding neighborhood's objections to increased traffic on Leavenworth and Fairchild, as well as Aggieville merchants' objections to restricting an access road to the business disject matter to the committee, members passed amendments to a resolution, which, if passed, will express the Senate's opposition to closing

Committee member Greg Cleaver proposed an amendment suggesting that in addition to finding a compromise that would decrease traffic flow on Laramic, negotiators look for a solution that would also decrease the number of parking spaces.

"Maybe that would also reduce traffic flow and increase safety," Cleaver said.

The amendment passed, with only Committee Secretary Lisa Dethloff

The committee also added in the resolution's reasoning that Leavenworth ran in front of an elementary school, and they changed the title of the resolution. Instead of just suggesting a compromise, the title is Opposition to the Proposed Closing of Laramie Street.'

They then voted 5-2 to send the legislation back to Senate with a favorable recommendation and a suggestion to read Carney's report.

"I think the Senate body is very torn on this one, and I know after looking over these reports, my opinion has changed immensely," Mandy Reese, committee member, said.

Clinton to propose new volunteer program

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA - Flanked by a corps of VIP volunteers, President Clinton urged Americans on Sunday to help each other to make the nation a better place, then pitched in to clean up a graffiti-scarred city block.

"I want to redefine the meaning of citizenship," Clinton told 5,000 enthusiastic volunteers.

To be a good citizen, the president said, means "You have to obey the law, you have to go to work or school, you have to pay your taxes and, oh yes, you have to serve in your community to make it a better place."

To kick off the three-day summit on volunteering, Clinton joined in scrubbing graffiti from walls in an 8-mile stretch of Philadelphia's poor Germantown neighborhood. Retired Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the summit, surveyed the throng of volunteers and said, "It's good to have an army again. I love it!" Powell said the point of the event was not government's role in helping people, but what and blue summit T-shirts, gave a bipartisan show of support for the concept of volunteering Former President Ford and former first lady Nancy Reagan were arriving later Sunday.

In a Sunday morning interview, Carter said the presidents wanted to "demonstrate to Americans at all levels of life that this is an acceptable thing to do.

"It is not a disgrace to pick up trash, to paint over graffiti or take an empty lot and make a garden out of it. It's an exultation of a human being to do manual labor side by side with people who are in need."

Clinton offered a couple ideas for promoting volunteering. He proposed that young people who commit to a year of volunteer work be exempted for the duration from paying interest on their student loans. And he said he would ask Congress to pay for a drive to ensure that every

Eighth-annual K-State Pow-wow brings people together for fellowship

More than 150 people Friday evening crowded onto the Memorial Stadium field for the eighthannual K-State Pow-wow.

Traditionally, pow-wows celebrated war victories. They are still celebrated today, but for new reasons.

"Nowadays, they're to celebrate maybe a birthday or someone's graduation," Lynette Miles, lead woman dancer of the Pow-wow, said. "They're fellowship. They bring people together."

The K-State event opened with a prayer, followed by a Kiowa flag song and a veteran song. The veteran song honored current enlisted people and all who were killed in action.

"If you're a war mother, you have a child stationed overseas or you've had someone die in war, you get up and dance to the veteran song to honor that person," said Lowell Russell, master of ceremonies and staff at Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence.

The K-State ROTC retired the colors after the opening, and Russell asked the dancers to take the

"They're an award-winning group," Russell said. "They've won three awards and are heading to a competition in Wisconsin."

Medicine Bluff, a group from Lawton, Okla., represented tribes from the south on the south drum.

"You can hear a difference in their sound, " Miles said. "The north drum voices are higher than the south. After dancing the snake dance, a Kiowa social dance, to the strong drum beat, six premier dancers in traditional Indian clothes competed as pairs for monetary prizes. The audience judged each pair by applause.

Russell later asked audience members to dance behind the winning pair.

"That's how Native Americans showed how they felt," he said.

Russell said he hopes the community learned a Foundry to provide new jobs for students

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

A foundry producing ductile-iron casting for equipment manufacturers across the United States could break ground in Manhattan as early as this fall.

The $20-million Farrar Corp. foundry, spanning 120,000 square feet, will occupy a 30-acre lot on north McCall Road, west of the Quaker Oats

"It's in the works," Farrar Corp president Joe Farrar said. "It was presented to Manhattan a year ago. We're targeting fall sometime.

Farrar said the foundry will undergo three phases, beginning with the production of ductile-iron casting. The second phase will be machining, followed by an eventual structural expansion to house heat-treating to make metal stronger or

Farrar said the foundry should reach phase three after five years in produc-

The Farrar foundry will hire 50 employees initially, but the plant is designed to grow to 250 employees with $40 million in sales per year in 10 years.

Farrar, a 1971 K-State graduate, lives and owns a foundry and machine shop in Norwich.

Farrar plans to keep both plants in production to reach different markets. "We'll be offering the same product but for different customers, because of different equipment we'll be using," he

Compared to the Norwich plant's production run of 100 parts, the Manhattan plant would produce in greater volumes with 1,000 parts.

"I'm very excited about it." Farrar said. "We have the opportunity to build a plant in Manhattan with mostly Manhattan jobs. I'm really excited about working it out where college students can be employees."

Farrar said he looks forward to establishing co-op and interriship programs with the engineering and business col-

"I hope to set it up so several jobs are available to college students with flexibility," he said. "We're going to give an opportunity to a lot of students in giving work most people in the Midwest haven't heard of."

Farrar said the foundry will become an asset to the Manhattan economy.

"It will broaden the economic base, basically by melting down scrap and turning it into parts, " he said.

Refugees ordered to leave Zaire

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KISANGANI, Zaire - Zaire's rebel leader ordered up to 100,000 Rwandan Hutu refugees out of Zaire on Sunday, giving the United Nations two months to track them down and send them home.

Laurent Kabila promised that international officials would have full access to search for the tens of thousands of refugees, whose fate is still unknown after they dispersed into the jungle when their camps allegedly came under attack last week

A few hundred refugees have been found. Some of these refugees said Zairian villagers attacked the camps with machetes, killing hundreds, and say Kabila's forces opened fire on at least one camp.

Authorities evacuated the first 40 of the refugees on Sunday, flying them directly from Kisangani to the Rwandan capital of Kigali, according to representatives of the U.N. refugee agency.

Kabila's fighters previously had blocked a planned U.N. airlift of the starving, disease-ridden refugees, saying in part that the refugee flights would interfere with his troops' movements.

But in talks with U.N. officials Sunday in Kisangani, Kabila abruptly gave the United Nations two months to collect and evacuate the refugees, Filippo Grandi of the U.N. refugee agency said.

Kabila said the airlift could use any airport except the rebel-held airport in Goma on the Rwandan border, Grandi

It was not clear what would happen to the refugees if they remained in Zaire after the 60-day deadline, the countdown for which starts May 1.

The refugee camps, crammed with 100,000 starving, exhausted and disease-ridden refugees days earlier, were found eerily deserted last week, five days after rebels sealed off the area to foreign aid workers and journalists.

Education is more than books. Volunteering can give students firsthand, realworld experience that could teach them more than a semester in any social-work class.

By giving their time, people have made a personal commitment and investment of themselves into the project.

This type of citizenship will produce important rewards. When students take an active role in the improvement of their communities, they are able to touch actual lives and increase an understanding of the world around them.

Take advantage of the opportunity to volunteer now, because when you get out of college and into the career field, you might not have enough time to do so.

Clinton has called for corporate and private businesses to contribute money and resources while allowing employees time off to volunteer. Students can give time and donate extra canned goods, old clothes and appliances to help those less fortunate.

It's refreshing to see a resurgence of interest in the inspired idealism of President

There are opportunities to volunteer everywhere. Students can baby-sit the children of working parents, spend time with the elderly and volunteer at local agencies such as Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc., Big Lakes Developmental Center Inc. and the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

TCI REFUTES COLLEGIAN STORY, EDITORIAL BOARD

Editor. I am writing this letter for two reasons. The first is to correct inaccuracies in both the article by Suzanne Sisco and the editorial board published in the April 24 Collegian.

The second is to express my disappointment in the way TCI and the City of Manhattan have been portrayed through both these inaccuracies and unmentioned facts.

TCI's cable rates are regulated. The guidelines for our rates are set under a complicated formula created by the Federal Communications Commission and monitored by the City of

This formula is intended to ensure the reasonableness of cable rates while allowing for a reasonable profit. If the city or any citizen (through the city) feels the rates are not within the guidelines mandated by the FCC, a complaint can be filed.

While it is true no one likes to see the price for anything go up, TCI works very hard to control its cost to operate and, in the end, to the consumer.

In fact, the new rate to be charged for basic cable service is lower than the amount the FCC will allow us to charge. Make no mistake, it is the customer that counts if any business is to sur-

Also, the City Commission does not renegotiate our contract every year. Cable rates are allowed to be adjusted annually, but this has essentially nothing to do with the nonexclusive agreement with the city authorizing TCl to provide cable service in Manhattan.

Franchise fees are also not normally negotiated each year. In fact, it has been many years since the franchise fee percentage has any way it can to provide the best service possible, resolve any complaints and stay abreast of the changing technology and regulation facing the cable industry. TCI intends to continue doing its best to service customers and cooperate with the City Commission (and assist them when requested or appropriate).

Finally, I hope in the future that the editorial board of the Collegian will do some research of their own before expressing a view based on less than all the facts; and I hope students submitting articles will use better judgment in the presentation, context and verification of the material they obtain for a story.

CELIBACY NOT A GUARANTEE AGAINST AIDS

Editor.

Justin Wilds' column on AIDS asks some worthy questions - but he may want to do a bit more research on the causes

Justin seems to have a preoccupation with sex here. Unprotected or "risky" sex is only one way HIV is transmitted.

Intravenous drug use and blood transfusions also spread the disease. How many people have died from AIDS from bad blood transfusions? How many children, like Ryan White, died virgins, with clean lungs and clean veins? What lessons are we to learn here? Better yet, who's teaching us these lessons? Perhaps we, society as a whole, need to have more respect for sex. On the other hand, adopting a celibate lifestyle won't save you from the evils of the world, on the whole prom thing. "You see, you have to get asked by someone. Otherwise, you just can't go," she told me as she picked Frito residue from her braces.

So there I was, set into a prom tizzy in the third grade. Pigeon-toed, big-haired little me. I knew I'd never get asked to the wondrous event comments to Brandi at (blh0377 that was prom. I entered high school a little less pigeon-toed, a little more big-haired and prom a distant thought in my mind. It was a junior and senior thing anyway, and besides, I wasn't one for squeezing myself into a little Jessica McClintock number and slapping on some blue eyeliner. And then the tides turned that March. His name was John, he was a junior, and I thought he was dreamy. He just liked my shoes, but somehow he asked me to prom anyway.

The prom fervor hit me with even more power than it had all those years ago. I (and it's a little painful for me to admit this even today) went as far as to smear self-tanning lotion on my creamy albino-like skin.

My hair was twisted into some intricate Can-You-Tell-I-Don't-Know-What-I'm-Doing design, complete with a big ol' bow that limited neck mobility. The dress was short, tight and tawdry, and, as my friend Karen described it, "Well, it doesn't leave much to the imagination."

The night began with a quaint meal at Bennigan's and ended with John trying to work the mack on me in his Toyota Celica in a middle-school parking lot.

Fortunately we only got as far as, "John, that tire iron gouging my knee really smarts," before it was midnight and he had to go home.

A magical evening indeed.

The next year, it was looking like prom wouldn't be an option for me. Since parts of my body were still an iridescent orange from the self-tanner, I chalked it up as a good thing.

Then one day in geometry class, I spotted dreamy guy No. 2 blowing on a rubber band. I looked at him, he at me, and I said, "Jesse, what are you doing?" And then he said

After a few more conversations like that and the exchange of a few Cadbury Creme Eggs, I found myself unknowingly on the road to prom once more.

The dress this time was much more subdued, which m sure all the other prom-goers appreciated. Unfortunately, details are pretty sketchy beyond that.

I did so well at that prom, Jesse asked me back for a second round my junior year. In retrospect, I probably should've just asked to play Plinko or Mountain Climber, but from what I can recall, we had a good time breakdancing to the sounds of the day's hottest rap hits

By that time, prom was becoming just another April routine, so I was putting less and less effort into my preprom preparations. That junior-year prom found me showering at the local recreation center, using free samples of shampoo to get ready. Then, the most special prom of all, the senior-year prom, was in my midst. It turned out to be a lesson in just how awkward first dates can really be Chris, my poor date, was forced to wear the boutonniere I made out of pipe cleaners because I sort of neglected to purchase a real one.

That brings us to prom No. 5.

My male companion, who also just happens to be a senior in high school, was feeling that promitch I, too, had felt so long ago. I was reluctant to return to my alma mater and hang out with high schoolers in the gym. But then, who am I to deny the joy of prom to anyone?

So I went, swathed in a dress I had sewn the Friday before while watching the hit movie "Fast Food." I'm lucky the stupid thing even stayed on.

Somehow, and I really don't know how, we ended up going to prom in a Winnebago with 37 high schoolers just squealing with excitement (and if you've ever seen the movie "Clerks," you'll understand why that situation was doubly funny.) I suffered a large gash from someone's acrylic fingernail

I'll sheepishly admit this, though: It was the most fun I'd had in a long time, despite the fact I missed out on some great times with some real cool girls who were knocking back shots in the bathroom. I was also left out of the post-prom plans to smoke pot in a shack behind Bethel College, but I'd say the night was a success anyway. And while I was there, I made some nice contacts with a few junior boys. Plans for prom No. 6 are underway.

Life, death of dad leaves legacy of faith

At 12:52 p.m. on Sunday, April 13 he left us and went to be with his beloved It feels strange just to see those words and know that they refer to my dad.

sometimes that I just sit down and cry. Other times it is like he is still right here beside me. I can not imagine life without him.

But I must go on. He leaves such a legacy to my brother and I that we must continue. It is a legacy of faith, of laughter and of love - so much love. His love for his family could (and possibly should) be emulated by all. His love for laughter kept everyone around him laughing, too. And his faith ... words simply can not adequately express the depth of his faith.

From the moment he was taken to the emergency room on April 11 until 12:52 p.m. on April 13, he said not one word against the God that had given him life. He was saying "I love you Jesus. I love you Father - you're a good Father," though he could barely breathe because of the cancer in his lungs. He was talking to God, quoting scripture and loving his family up until his last breath.

Saturday night, while I was rubbing his back to keep him calm, he would wake up, roll over to make sure my mom was still there, and say, "I love you, Annie." His breath was so short that we could barely understand him, but Mom would hold his hand and say, "I love you too, Jim."

I still can not believe that he is gone. Saturday, before I arrived to help take care of him, my family told me that he had everyone in the room laughing.

That was Dad. He did not want people worrying about

But, most of all he wanted people to know Jesus.

He held on for the last few hours because I think he knew how much we needed him. As the end was drawing near, he sat up willing himself to stay alive. He was struggling to breathe, struggling to live, struggling not to die.

Suddenly, I heard a scream. My cousin David's wife came running down the hall, crying for him.

We ran down to the room. I burst through the door as my dad was taking his final breaths.

I watched him pass from death to life. As he left his dying body, I saw the eyes which had so much love - so much laughter become just eyes. Blank, staring eyes.

There are no words that can describe the sense of loss that overwhelms the moment in time when someone you love so much has left this life.

He was truly gone. He would never wink across a room at me again. He would never tell another stupid joke, laughing and snorting and enjoying himself so much that you could not help but join in. His hugs ... his grins ... his tears ... he was gone. How could we go on? The next two days are a blur in my mind. My brother Michael arrived home from out of town. We planned Dad's funeral - or "Resurrection Celebration" as Michael's future mother-in-law calls it. We practiced singing a country song by Holly Dunn called "Daddy's Hands" that could have been written for my Dad. I was strong — then weak; happy — then sad; laughing - then crying. Everything around me was crumbling, so I tried to be strong.

"How could it be? How can it be? It can

My thoughts were at times long streams of denial, and at other moments flooded with such happy memories that I could scarcely contain them.

But, most of all was the hollow space in me. Such an emptiness remained - and

The celebration of my dad's life that was his service is one of the most powerful experiences of my life. Two of my cousins and a girl from Dad's youth group gave their lives to Jesus that day. My grandmother gave her life to Him the day my dad

My uncle who had been an alcoholic and a drug user before he met his future wife talked to me the evening after the funeral. He said, "Kevin, I'm gonna know Jesus like Jim knew Jesus."

Our wonderful heavenly Father is not letting my dad die in vain. He is using the tragedy of my 44-year-old father's death to make one of my dad's lifelong dreams Dad's family was coming to Jesus.

In that I take consolation. In that I take hope. In that I know that Jesus does care. I will see my dad again. And, because we have such a gracious and kind heavenly Father, many of his family will see him

Though I miss Dad terribly, I love him

I always will.

3 Ottawa residents drown off California coastline

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OTTAWA — In the days before she left for California, 10-year-old Ivy Pacheco chattered constantly about seeing the Pacific Ocean for the first time.

"She had never been there," said Gwen Chandler, who is married to Ivy's grandfather, James Chandler. "She and (her brother, T.J.) both liked to swim. The things they were going to see, she was so excited about."

Ivy, her mother, Mary "Paulie" Pacheco, 38, and Ivy's grandmother, Judith Rombold, 65, drowned Friday off Julia Pfeiffer Burns State Beach, where they had gone to walk and play in the surf. The beach is in an isolated area about 35 miles south of Monterey.

The three, along with Ivy's 8-yearold brother, Trevor "T.J." Chandler, had traveled to California on Thursday to watch another family member run in a marathon

Ivy apparently got caught in a severe undertow and was being sucked away from the beach. Her grandmother jumped into the roiling waves to help and also was dragged in. Her mother then was pulled in as she tried to help the two.

T.J. had been walking ahead of his family on the beach and was not injured.

When others on the beach saw the family struggling, some tried to help and another ran to the closest house, about a mile away. Terry Prince, a 48-year-old surfer, lived in the house with his friend Noel Thygeson.

"Noel and I were drinking a cup of coffee when a lady came over and said there were three people stuck on the rocks," Prince said in a telephone interview Saturday with the Kansas City

He put on a wet suit, grabbed his surfboard and headed for the beach.

Prince said he had little hope of finding the three when he saw the 6- to 8-foot waves pounding against huge rocks that jut out of the ocean.

"I thought the ocean had taken them out," Prince told the newspaper. Still, he paddled out into the surf on his board.

"As God would have it, I managed to catch a wave and rode right up to Ivy," Prince said. "She was caught in an eddy in the middle of the bay. It just held her there just like a whirlpool."

Thygeson, who is a medic, and others had found Ivy's grandmother and mother and pulled them in.

Ivy's grandmother was pronounced dead on the beach. Ivy and her mother were taken to a hospital, where they later died.

The hospital notified Ivy's father, David Pacheco, in Ottawa, that his wife had been killed, and hospital officials helped arrange a flight for him to California, said his brother, Phillip David Pacheco had to stop in Las Vegas to change planes and called the hospital to check on his daughter. That's when he found out she also had died.

"Imagine knowing your wife had died, not knowing how your daughter was doing, and then finding out she was gone," Phillip Pacheco told the Star. "I can't imagine what he was going through."

'Freemen' resurfacing in Pottawatomie County

ASSOCIATED PRES

WESTMORELAND — A year after a lengthy standoff with federal authorities in Montana that ended with the arrests of their leaders, the "freemen" are resurfacing in Kansas.

"Now these people are talking about making Kansas a sovereign republic," said Pottawatomie County Sheriff Tony Metcalf, who last summer estimated that 100 freemen were in his area.

In Shawnee County, Sgt. J.D. Mauck of the Sheriff's Department said a group calling itself the Christian Court recently met in Abilene and ordered the arrest of Gov. Bill Graves for taking his oath of office improperly.

Graves spokesman Mike Matson said the governor hadn't received the "charges," but added, "We've heard the same charges made against pretty much every public official in the state."

"Freemen" is a term adopted by those who claim sovereignty from government jurisdiction and operate under their own legal system, which they call common-law courts. Adherents have declared themselves exempt from laws, regulations and taxes. They often file liens against judges, prosecutors and others, claiming that money is owed to them as compensation.

Kansas officials say it's impossible to tell how many freemen are in the state because many have gone underground since the standoff in Montana. Others have "gotten legal" by renewing their driver's licenses and putting legitimate license plates on their vehicles.

Some sheriffs, however, are becoming concerned.

They say that federal and state authorities are encouraging the freemen by not prosecuting them for filing frivolous liens and promoting what they contend is a bogus-check scheme, which may violate federal bank fraud laws.

As a result, the Shawnee County district attorney's office is sending letters to banking and lending institutions today, warning them to be on the lookout again for the freemen's checks.

"They're telling people that the checks are legal because they didn't get prosecuted the last time," said Suzanne James, Shawnee County's director of victim services. First, call 911.

I think Bill Snyder is making a mistake.

By not disclosing the reason for wide receiver Andre Anderson's dismissal, Snyder has put everyone in a bad situation.

People end up coming up with their own ideas of exactly what team rule was broken. Rumors abound. If the leading, returning receiver is dismissed from the team, the loyal Wildcat faithful deserves to know. The 43,000 that pack

It is only fair to Anderson to let the truth be known. The reason for his dismissal cannot possibly be worse than some of the rumors that surfaced in the past week.

The worst rumor is Anderson's dismissal was brought about by being caught with a handgun. Even this paper has reported on this rumor, and if Anderson is going to contend this was not the case, then let the truth come to light.

People deserve answers.

Speaking of answers, I am not buying Fuzzy Zoeller's apology for off-color remarks on golfing sensation

Zoeller made the remarks in front of a national media outlet and should have prepared to deal with the consequences. If you are going to say something, you better be prepared to defend it. An apology days later just infers Zoeller is not sorry about the remarks he made. He was only saving face.

Public figures have to be prepared to defend statements and stand behind them. Zoeller is a weak man.

 I am giving my props to KSDB-FM 91.9's "Sports Talk."

In the past few weeks I have listened to the program on a somewhat regular basis, and I have enjoyed it.

K-State baseball features are the strength of the show, and it is great to see the players get their much-deserved time in the limelight. This show is your only source of real K-State baseball discussion, so give it a shot.

If you need one more reason, you can at least hear Collegian sports editor Jeremy Kelley as the only regular call-in on the show.

Listen to some of his questions, and you will easily come to the conclusion no one asks more drawn-out, complex, twisting questions than Kelley. His questions are a show in itself.

His questions are a show in itself.

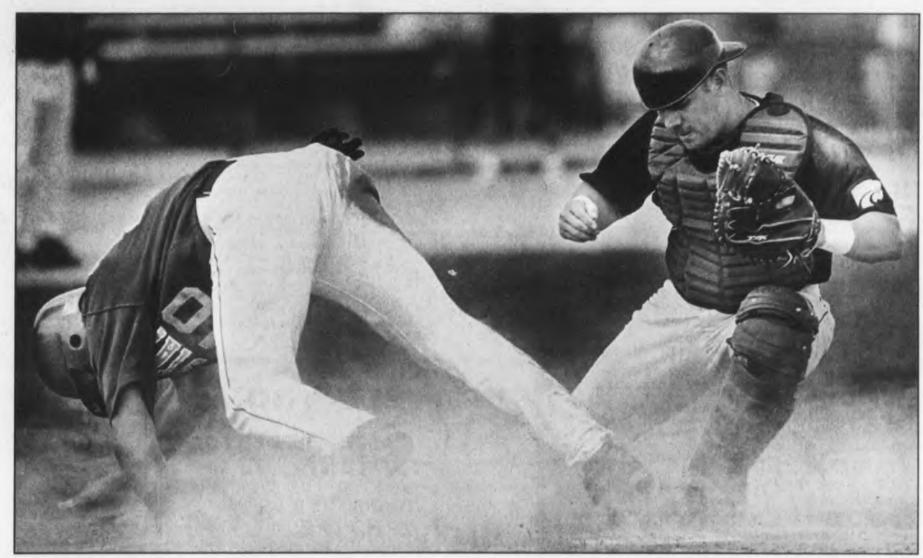

I have a question I would like to throw out there for everybody.

With the departure of 7', 260pound center Dax Jones from the basketball team, can we get him out there for football?

OK, maybe 7 foot is a little big for a football player, but let's experiment. How hard would Jones be to pull down as the largest fullback in NCAA history? I know one person couldn't do it, and I am not sure two people could. Three, maybe. Maybe.

Jones was the most physically intimidating Wildcat on the hardwood last season, and that could easily carry over to the football field. Let's give Jones another chance in the purple and white.

K-State had been in the midst of an 11-game losing streak, including 10 straight Big 12 games, but the Cats took a doubleheader from Iowa State on Saturday 10-9 and 7-6, then dropped the final game of the series on Sunday, 14-4. "It's always good to win a baseball game," K-State head coach Mike Clark said. "At least we're back on the winning track. You never like to lose when you're competitive."

In the opener, senior left fielder Scott Poepard went three for five and knocked in two batters, and right fielder Brian Bobier notched two hits and scored two runs for the Cats.

The Cats used a three-run fourth inning to surge past the Cyclones. Center fielder Garrett Bell led off the inning with a single to center field and then stole second. Bobier walked. Shortstop Heath Schesser knocked in Bell on a single to right field. With DH Mike Gardner at the plate, Bell scored on a wild pitch and drove in Schesser to end the inning.

Pitcher David Johnson came on in relief for David Mears and defused the Cyclones' rally en route to picking up his 11th save on the year, which leads the nation. Starter Mickey Blount went six innings and tallied seven strikeouts and picked up the win for K-State to improve his record to 2-1

In the nightcap, K-State found itself in a deep hole early as Iowa State led 8-0 after the second inning. Jon Oiseth started the game for the Cats but exited quickly when Iowa State scored five runs on just two hits. Oiseth's replacement, Brandon Peck, received a wake-up call after short-stop Jade O'Brien hit a three-run homer on his first pitch.

But K-State maneuvered its way back into the game behind Jason Bichelmeyer's two-run homer in the third, his eighth of the season. K-State got even with the Cyclones in the sixth when Bobier's single to right field scored Poepard.

The Cats' go-ahead run came in the ninth inning when second baseman J.D. Loudabarger walked and scored from first on an errant single to right field by pinch hitter Brooke Court.

Brian Thompson stifled Iowa State in the ninth and picked up the win for K-State.

In the final game of the series on Sunday, Iowa State spanked the Cats on a seven-run fifth inning that K-State had no answer for.

Iowa State added two more runs in the seventh and eighth innings behind third baseman Bill Uelmen's two-run shot to right center that accounted for the final score.

"When we got deep in our bullpen they took advantage of that," Clark said. "They just kept hitting the ball." Clark said he was impressed with the series because it opened doors of opportunity to some guys who are striving for individual honors.

"We've got some guys who are having outstanding years, and some guys who are going for some big honors," Clark said. "There are a lot of positive things that we're looking for."

Johnson already leads the nation in saves, Schesser needs just one homer to capture the record for homers in a single season, and Poepard needs one homer to surpass Dave Hendrix's career home run mark of 30.

K-State (24-22, 7-20) sits at ninth place in the Big 12, just ahead of Nebraska and Iowa State. The Cats are back in action again on Wednesday against Bethany College at Frank Myers Field. The opening pitch is scheduled for 4 p.m.

PCL Player of the Year intends to play at K-State

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury announced Friday that Charles Dinkins had signed a national letter of intent to attend K-State and continue his basketball career.

"Charles has had great success putting points on the board," Asbury said. "He will bring a needed offensive dimension to the guard/forward positions here at K-State. He's a true scorer. Charles is a good offensive player who can shoot from the perimeter and put the ball on the floor and take it to the basket. I am excited about his decision."

Dinkins, a 6'5", 190-pound guard/forward, earned Player of the Year honors in the Pacific Coast League in 1997 at Southwestern Community College in California, near San Diego. He is scheduled to graduate with an associate's degree in physical education from Southwestern in May.

Dinkins, who did not play basketball as a high-school student, finished his community college career as Southwestern's all-time leading scorer after averaging 23.7 point per game as a freshman and 27 points as a sophomore.

His scoring average ranked second among all California community college players in 1997. Dinkins also averaged 12.2 point rebounds per game last season to rank fifth in the state, while shooting 64 percent (269-420) to also rank fifth in field-goal percentage. Included in his 269 total field goals last season were 16 three-pointers and 122 free throws in 25 games.

Dinkins was a first team all-state pick by California community college coaches and also was recruited by New Mexico, Rutgers, Southwestern Louisiana, Virginia and East Carolina.

Royals upend Oakland A's, 7-1

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tim Belcher is no longer the power pitcher he once was, so he has found other ways of shutting down opponents.

Belcher came within one out of a shutout, pitching a sixhitter Sunday as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Oakland Athletics 7-1.

Belcher (2-3) allowed only four singles in the first eight innings. Jose Canseco doubled with one out in the ninth and Matt Stairs' single with two outs spoiled Belcher's bid for his 18th shutout.

Belcher, who had lost his previous three starts, struck out two and walked one. It was his 37th career complete game.

"I don't think I was dominant in the sense of striking everybody out, but that's not the focal point of my game now anyway," Belcher said. "I move the fastball around. As long as I don't give out any free passes, I'm OK."

Kansas City's bullpen blew a three-run lead in the 11th inning in a loss to Oakland on Saturday, and Belcher said he was determined not to allow a repeat on Sunday.

"Obviously, after yesterday, the starter wants to go out there and keep the bullpen out of it," he said. "My thoughts in the ninth were to win the game and finish the game."

Joe Vitiello had a two-run single for the Royals in the first and Bip Roberts had an RBI double in the second.

The Royals added three runs in the ninth off relievers Buddy Groom and Bill Taylor. Jeff King and Mike Macfarlane had RBI singles and the other run scored on a double-play grounder.

Mike Mohler (0-3) had a career-high nine strikeouts while allowing four runs on six hits in 6 1/3 innings.

"It doesn't mean nothing," Mohler said of the whiffs.
"I'm not a strikeout pitcher. If I struck somebody out, it's because they were looking for another pitch."

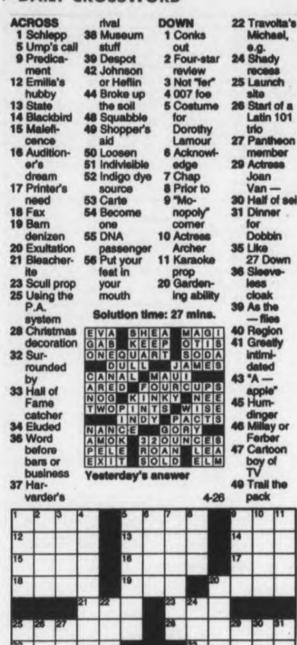

Two singles, an error by center fielder Damon Mashore and a stolen base set up Vitiello's two-run single to center in the first. Roberts, who left the game in the seventh with a swollen right pinky, blooped his double in the second.

The sale of student season tickets for the 1997 K-State football season have been extended through Friday. To take advantage of the priority system, returning students must order tickets by Friday. Sherpas helps BirdHouse music scene celebrate 2nd anniversary of sound

The BirdHouse music series celebrated its second anniversary at the Manhattan Center for the Arts Saturday by treating a large crowd to perhaps too much alcohol, plenty of cake with electric-blue icing and the musical stylings of the Sherpas. Tom Kimmel and Tom Prasada-Rao played a BirdHouse concert in 1995 as a benefit for Habitat for Humanity, to much critical acclaim.

This time around, they teamed up with Nashville songwriter-guitarist Michael Lille to form the Though it was obvious they were an occasional group, the talent of all three performers shone through. The group mainly took each others' solo songs and worked them into a tune with three parts.

Lille, who was consistently amazing on guitar, played simplistic yet stylistically impressive guitar licks behind Kimmel or Prasada-Rao's rhythm guitar and vocals

Each Sherpa had several opportunities to showcase their individual talent as well, with each one performing an occasional solo.

Lille, who introduced one of his songs as "the tall, Norwegian portion of the show," got the already giddy crowd laughing with his tune, "Everybody Loves the Fair." Lines such as "Why am I here? I need a beer," were especially humorous, yet somehow musical in a John McCutcheon

On two songs, Prasada-Rao temptingly whipped out a violin, but unfortunately, he didn't get a real chance to show off his fiddlin' skills. The violin was limited to wimpy background voicing underneath the guitars, rather than being used to its full

The Sherpas also performed a few of their collaborative songs. The harmonies on those songs were better knit into the fabric of the music than on the songs they adapted. The harmonies were more intricate and creative, whereas on the adapted works, they were the same and stuck in the same place in each song.

The majority of the songs performed by the Sherpas were mellow ballads with heaping helpings of guitar and vocal harmonics.

While this produced a nice sound and made clear the talent in the group, the beauty of the ballads would have been more pronounced as they mixed it up a little by throwing in more upbeat

The Sherpas were most certainly crowd pleasing, receiving an encore and a standing ovation from the back row. If they would only rock out of their rut of mostly mournful ballads, the Sherpas could become a force to be reckoned with.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Take time to walk barefoot around campus this week. Just look out for flaming cigarette butts tossed carelessly on the ground by bitter Libras.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). One word: sauerkraut. VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)- Still hunting for the perfect job? Perhaps perusing through a shopper would aid you in your quest for monetary nourishment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) So you've decided to quit smoking? Good for you! Still puffing away on cigarettes like they are Pixi Stix? Tsk tsk. Take a cue from your smoke-free Libra brothers and sisters, because as they say: Kissing a smoker is like licking an ashtray. And trust me, licking ashtrays SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Trudging through all of those 15-page papers has left a drain on your tolerance level. And, as a fire sign, your temper might be getting way out of hand this week, much to the chagrin of those who must occupy space around you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) The dark clouds are parting, so put that umbrella away! It's finally time for you to have a little sunshine in your otherwise gloomy life. Slap on that SPF 15 and bask in life's glow

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) All those times you stomped on someone's heart will be coming back around to you shortly. As far as damage control goes, just act like you don't care That armor around your heart should stay in AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) The recent spring illness that has befallen you will soon be making someone else's lungs phlegmy Meanwhile, yours will be sparkling clear, making it quite easy for you to laugh at the misfortune of others. Ha ha ha.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

On an Israeli TV program in January, Hamas militant Rashid Sagger, who was captured by the PLO last year before he could carry out a scheduled suicide bombing in Israel, waxed rhapsodic about his love of soccer. He said he was such a fan that "I couldn't [kill myself] in [an Israeli] soccer stadium. Yes, they are Zionists [and] unbelievers. But I couldn't do it [there]."

A combination of football and rugby, Earthball gave 10 fraternities and two sororities a way to let off some steam Saturday.

Earthball is the philanthropy of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and Delta Chi fraternity. In Earthball, the players try to push a ball that is five feet in diameter across the goal line. Teams play four, four-minute quarters to determine the winner.

Earthball has grown in the three years of its existence.

"We've added to new teams this year, but three teams that usually play couldn't this year," Craig Schutzler, senior in mangement, said.

He said the fraternities like it because it is active. He said the sororities like it once they partic-

The money collected from Earthball is given to the Manhattan Emergency Shelter. Teams are charged $50 dollars for one team and $25 for each additional team. There is also money collected through T-shirt sales during the week.

"The main idea is to raise money," Bethany Wolken, junior in industrial engineering, said.

Playing Earthball on Saturday caps a half week of festivities.

There are three different areas in which the teams participate. All of the teams can buy shirts that contribute to point total. They can also earn points for how many pounds of aluminum cans they can collect Schutzler said it works out so teams have to do well in all of the categories to win.

The winners of the double elimination Earthball competition and overall competition were the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity and Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Some of the teams in Earthball love the rough style of play.

"The competitive aspect with fellow students is what I like. It and keep it in the air. The rough nature of the game is great but, at the same time, by the third quarter, they are huffing and puffing, he said.

> There are many things he likes about Earthball.

"I wish it wasn't on Saturday because of the Friday night aspect. All in all, the philanthropy is worth coming out and spending the Saturday with others," he said.

third grader can read, vowing to rally an army of a million reading tutors.

The nonpartisan summit, bringing together representatives from Washington, corporate America, religious organizations and community service groups, is aimed at promoting volunteering nationwide.

Clinton, interviewed Saturday for CBS' "Face the Nation," said the proposal he will introduce Monday in Congress would ask young people, supported by their churches, to donate a year of full-time work in community service.

In return, they wouldn't have to pay interest on their student loans during that

He said the program would cost only a few million dollars and "will be worth hundreds of millions of dollars in time, volunteers, public interest advance. The return will be staggering."

In contrast, the five-year "America Reads" program, aimed at ensuring that third graders can read, would cost an estimated $2.5 billion. It would attempt to mobilize 1 million volunteer tutors, provide $300 million for programs to help parents help their children and expand Head Start.

Also in his interview with CBS, Clinton said it will be clear within a few days whether the administration and congressional Republicans can come to an accord on a balanced budget plan. "I think there is a good chance we can," he said.

As one possible aspect of that, Clinton acknowledged there is an overwhelming consensus that current formulas to measure cost-of-living adjustments for recipients of federal benefits overstate the inflation rate and that adjusting that rate was justified.

Revising downward the cost-of-living increases for those receiving Social Security and other benefits could save the federal government billions of dollars every year.

Clinton said a proposal by Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah and Democrat Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts to raise cigarette taxes by 43 cents a pack to finance health insurance for children was a pretty gutsy move.

Missing truck carrying training missiles found in Texas dummy Air Force missiles he had been carrying were found 300 miles apart on Friday. He reportedly didn't know what he was carrying and dumped it when his contractor refused to pay him more money.

The driver, Ronald D. Coy of Middletown, Ohio, put up no resistance and was unarmed when he was found at a truck stop in the town of Orange near the Louisiana line, FBI agent Robert Loosle

Coy, 42, was arrested and charged with

Saturday before a federal magistrate in Beaumont.

The Houston Chronicle, citing unnamed sources familiar with the search, reported Saturday that Coy spent all his cash during the trip, then called his transportation company seeking more money.

He dropped the cargo when they refused, apparently unaware of what he was hauling and hoping to find another cargo elsewhere, the sources said.

The Middletown (Ohio) Journal reportcated her husband had financial problems when she filed a missing persons report on him Jan. 11.

In the report, Barbara Coy said he took $17,000 in cash advances from a credit card account during a short period of time, leaving her with $230 in the bank.

Barbara Coy said she filed the report nine days after he left town and six days after he left a message on their answering machine that said, "In case you were wondering, I really do love you, but I am in

"I just couldn't imagine what had happened," she said. "There was just nothing wrong when he left."

The Air Force said the AGM-130 guided missiles weren't equipped with working warheads or explosives and posed no risk to the public. The devices, each worth about $150,000, carry infrared and laser guidance equipment allowing pilots to fly attack patterns and get computerized data.

The missiles were recovered in Ranger, 110 miles west of Dallas. "We believe the Force spokesman Maj. Rob Koon.

The containers, marked "transformer," had been left at a fenced-in lumber yard Wednesday, Ranger Police Chief Don Enix said. "The truck driver told them he had bald tires and that the floor of his trailer had some problems, so he had to get that fixed," he said.

The missiles had been picked up at a Boeing plant in Duluth, Ga., and were supposed to be taken to Cannon Air Force Base in Clovis, N.M., for use in air defense

Authorities initially said the vehicle had a tracking beacon and was being monitored by satellite until it vanished from computer screens Thursday. Loosle told the Chronicle that wasn't the case - it had no tracking system. The search instead was triggered after the cargo was late to New

Rottweilers pose potential

The fatal rottweiler attack Thursday in Milford on an 11-year-old boy has many people concerned about the safety of themselves and their children.

Dr. Kathy Gaughen, clinical instructor at K-State, said rottweilers' behavior

"Some have been aggressive, and some have been angels. The majority I have seen aren't aggressive," she said.

She said the way the dogs are socialized goes a long way in determining their behavior.

If they are socialized to interact with people and children when they're puppies, they will be much more accepting when they are grown, she said. "They are a prey-driven breed. When something is running, their natural instinct is to chase it," Gaughen said. She said she thinks it is the owners' responsibility to watch how their dogs likelihood of this tragedy would be reduced. When they run in packs, they egg each other on just like children," she Rottweilers can grow to weigh up to 130 pounds. They are athletic dogs that have large heads and strong jaws.

Gaughen said people can avoid problems with dogs in general by not getting a dog just because it's a popular breed.

"Some owners get dogs and think that the dogs can distinguish on their own what is right and wrong," she said.

She said that when dogs are unsupervised and chained to a stake, people walk by and the dogs bark at them. The dog does this to get the people to leave, and when they do, the dog has in effect learned a behavior without its owner

Gaughen said children are too often the victims of horseplay with dogs.

People should never leave a child and a dog alone together. The dog-is bigger than the child, and you never know when the child might do something to provoke the dog," she said.

She said tragedies can be avoided, but people must help.

'Owners are responsible for the behavior of their dogs be it getting vaccination, spade and neutering," she said.

FORT DAVIS, Texas - Armed members of a group demanding a referendum on Texas independence were locked in a standoff with authorities Monday after freeing two hostages in exchange for a jailed com-

State and federal officers, including state and FBI swat teams, ringed the mountainous Davis Mountains Resort community as the standoff continued a second night.

Authorities were negotiating with Richard McLaren, self-styled ambassador of one faction of the separatist group called the Republic of Texas. McLaren said in a news release that discussions were taking place at his so-called embassy, a trailer in the development.

"He continues to invoke the laws of the Republic of Texas. He wants the United Nations," said Mike Cox, a spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety. Republic members have told negotiators that they will defend what they call their sovereign soil.

It was not known exactly where the group was holed up, how many members were there or what type of weapons they have. One of the released hostages, Joe Rowe, estimated there were 10 Republic members, including McLaren.

Authorities urged other residents of the sprawling, remote community to leave the area. But "No one else is considered in harm's way," Cox said.

The confrontation started Sunday when two men and a woman wearing militarystyle fatigues fired assault rifles at the front door of Joe and Margaret Ann Rowe and took them hostage.

They were held for 12 hours while their captors demanded the release of two followers who had been arrested. Early Monday, they exchanged the Rowes for Robert Jonathan Scheidt, identified as captain of the embassy guard of the Republic of Texas.

Scheidt, released on his own recognizance, initially didn't want to take part in the swap, said Presidio County Judge Jake Brisbin, who spent Sunday talking with Scheidt at a jail in Marfa.

"I suggested to him that there are a few times in people's lives that they can step up and do the right thing," Brisbin said. "He said he couldn't do that.'

About 20 minutes later, the judge said Scheidt changed his mind. "He did not want any harm to come to the Rowes," Brisbin

Brisbin said he sensed that Scheidt was Tyler Houdek, senior in history, died late Sunday of an apparent heart attack while Houdek, on track to graduate in May, was described by friends as the heart and soul of the ROTC program.

"Tyler, to me, was a model cadet," Lt. Col. Robert Kennedy said. "In my estima-tion, he is the person, if I had a son, I would want him to be just like him."

Houdek's love and commitment to the ROTC program was evident for anyone who

Shae Weide, senior in secondary education in history and battalion commander, said Houdek's goal in life was to be in the military. "It meant just about everything to him," Weide said. "More than anything he wanted to be in the world, he wanted to be a lieutenant in the Army."

Houdek recently earned the George C. Marshall award, which recognizes the top cadet in a university. During a recent interview about the award, Houdek said the ROTC program offered him even more than he originally expected.

"The friends I've made have turned college into something so much more than to just go to college," Houdek said. That sentiment was echoed by Houdek's friends. Weide said Houdek's outgoing nature was a distinguishing quality

"You couldn't have a more loyal friend," Weide said. "He was fun to be around, always entertaining people. That's what I'm going to miss. He would always sacrifice his time and life for his friends and those who Houdek's sacrifices for those in need will also be remembered by new acquaintances. Jason McIntyre, junior in marketing, said he met Houdek last fall and was impressed by his professional attitude. "He worked with a lot of people who were new to the program hand-in-hand on his own personal time," McIntyre said. "He treated us like we were the same rank with That respect Houdek showed others will be remembered by the ROTC program. Kennedy said the cadets associated Houdek's name with respect. "Respect because he assertively and tactfully takes actions to support his convictions," Kennedy said. "That's a quality most people don't do.' Houdek's ability to take action was displayed last semester when the ROTC's rifle range needed repair. Kennedy said a cadet fund was established and Houdek led the group that was in charge of press box ushers and security detail. Kennedy said Houdek convinced his group to willingly donate their personal earnings from the job to the rifle range renovations. The group accumulated $1,500 dollars for the fund.

Houdek had planned to enter active duty for the Army after graduation. He was to attend field artillery training at Fort Sill in Pounding rock music, blue ribbons and T-shirts declaring "Be aware of the pro-active difference you can make in the issues of sexual violence and bring the campus of KSU together in this fight," greeted about 50 students as they entered the Union free-speech zone for the second-annual Men Against Rape Society

The students carried a "Take Back the Pride" banner from Weber Hall around campus prior to gathering in front of the K-State Student Union Monday night. The banner bore the signatures of concerned students.

"I have a hard time holding up my head as a man when I know that rape is happening," said Paul English, organizer of the original event and co-president of the Student Action Team. "This is my way of taking back the pride.'

English said that according to statistics, one in 12 men will commit a sex crime. He asked the audience to imagine what those statistics mean to K-

English said he modeled the event after a similar one taking place in many cities called "Take Back the Night."

"It's reflective of the women who are affected by rape. They gather sometimes to say 'We aren't afraid," said Linda Kalkowski, co-president of the Student Action Team and an organizer of the rally. John Danos, residence life coordinator of Goodnow Hall, said he believes that it is important for men to acknowledge that violence against women is a significant problem.

"It's a common misconception that rape is a women's issue," Danos said. "And that couldn't be further from the truth. It's an issue that affects everyone."

PAUL ENGLISH, left, senior in history, and Leo Prieto, right, sophomore in pre-medicine, lead a procession of about 50 men and women on a march through campus Monday evening as part of the second annual Men Against Rape Society rally.

Earlier in the year, MARS sponsored a poster that features male leaders on campus who are opposed to sexual violence. Among those featured are K-State head coach Bill Snyder, Senate Vice Chair Tracey Mann and former Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto.

Former Student Body President Chris Hansen is also featured on the poster and spoke at the rally.

'We're taking time to take a pro-active stance on this issue," Hansen said. "We're going to talk to our friends one-on-one and then say it publicly.' English ended the rally by thanking the Student Governing Association, Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco, Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, and the residence halls for their contributions and

System lockup results in campuswide power outage

JOHN HENDERSON

A brief system lockup at the Manhattan station of KPL Gas service 11 a.m. Monday led to a five-minute power outage across campus.

The outage lasted long enough to remind people how much we rely on electrical power, said Stacy Kohlmeier, operations manager for KPL in Manhattan. At press time, the cause of the lockup was unknown.

'We have people looking where the fault probably happened," she said. "Most of Manhattan probably only saw a blink and didn't realize what it was."

KPL provides power in two voltages, 115 kilovolts and 34.5 kV, she said. The latter form is used by the physical power plant on campus to help power steam engines, she said. "Their systems are very sensitive,"

Dave Remmert, supervisor for the physical plant, said the boilers went down during the lockup and lost steam, which led to more widespread loss of power across campus.

Barb Depew, production manager for Union Food Services, said the employees in the kitchen and Stateroom began standard procedure when the lights first went out. They got out candles and began locking cabinets and freezers so nothing would be stolen, she said.

"Then we heard on the radio that we were supposed to evacuate the building," Depew said, referring to the walkie-talkie radios the K-State staff members use.

The employees left the building and stayed outside until they heard building managers say the power was back on. They got about seven minutes break time in the confusion, she said. "It was like a panic attack," Depew

Kohlmeier said rural areas like Westmoreland probably experienced total outage, because they get power from the 115 kV line. "It could be that it goes away, and we'll never know what caused it," she

Senators from Kansas, Texas oppose crop reduction plan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - A bipartisan group of senators vowed Monday to oppose a House measure that would sharply reduce the amount of farmland set aside this year under a popular conservation program.

In a letter to Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, the contingent of mostly farm-state senators urged rejection of the House effort to lower the Conservation Reserve Program limit from 19 million acres to 14 million

This acreage limitation would have a disproportionately negative impact on the quality of agriculture and environment in more than a dozen states, the 19 senators said in their letter.

The letter was circulated by Republican Sens. Pat Roberts of Kansas, Kay Bailey Hutchison and Phil Gramm both of Texas, who represent states that stand to lose the most under the House plan.

Kansas farmers, for example, could see at least 500,000 acres taken out of CRP under the new limit.

The main House sponsor, GOP Rep. James Walsh of New York, included the lower limit in supplemental emergency legislation intended mainly to help disaster victims in the upper Midwest. Walsh wants more acres set aside in the East through CRP.

Hutchison said including the CRP limit in the flood relief bill was an abomination, and Roberts said there was no evidence it would save money to pay for disaster aid.

"The CRP limitation is not a cost-saving issue. But the cost to the environment and the farmer would be great if this measure is enacted," Roberts said.

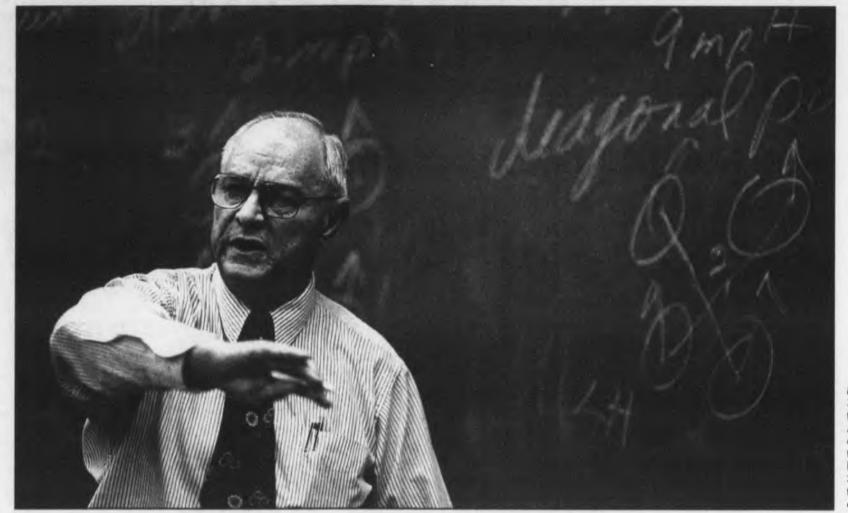

"We're going to keep the pressure on until CRP acreage is properly restored."

There will also be an effort on the House floor to remove the CRP measure when the disaster aid bill is debated this week.

Under CRP, farmers are paid to keep sensitive land out of production for 10 years. The government also helps them plant grass or trees to control erosion and create wildlife habitat.

CRP contracts on about 22 million acres are due to expire this fall. Farmers have offered to enroll about 26 million acres, most of which already are in the program.

Meanwhile, the House was expected to vote today on a separate bill that would allow farmland in winter wheat areas to remain in a conservation program for one more year, even if the land is later rejected for CRP by the Department of Agriculture.

'When he was herdsman at the barn, if you in 1947. He received a degree in animal husneeded livestock, day or night, it was done, no bandry in 1951. In 1959, McKee became part of questions asked. He would have them fitted and fixed up however you wanted them, and if it was humanly possible Miles McKee had them ready for you," Drake said.

While McKee was herdsman in 1965, an opening became available in the animal sciences department.

"The head of the department came out of the barn one day where I was working and said, 'We are going to be having an opening on the staff, and if you would like to fill it, we will hire you," McKee said.

Part of the agreement for the position was that McKee go somewhere else to get a doctorate. In the summer of 1966, McKee and his family moved to Lexington, Ky., where he received his doctorate. In fall 1967, McKee and his family moved back to Manhattan, and he has been teaching here ever since.

As a professor, McKee has taught many classes, including Principles of Animal Science and Lab, Beef Science, Gestation of Farm Animals, Livestock Production Management and Livestock Sales Management.

McKee advises students and teaches Principles of Animal Science and Livestock

"Very few people would have the patience and perseverance to work with students and suffer through their problems like Miles McKee does," he said.

During his time at K-State as a student and a faculty member, McKee has worked with three generations of students.

"He has been a father to many students besides his own family," Drake said.

Schaake, a graduate of K-State in animal science and industry, said McKee was his first animal sciences professor.

"He was the inspiration for me in that first animal science class to get more involved in animal sciences here in our department," he said.

"The first thing that I realized about McKee is he loves to teach. That is his life, you can tell he enjoys it, and when you have someone like him that is that enthusiastic about teaching, then as a student you enjoy learning and listening,"

But 12.1 million U.S. women have been raped, and more than half were raped before they were 18 years old, according to National Victim Center statistics from 1992 (http://pubweb.ucdavis.edu/Documents/RPEP/nvcstats.

> And so, while it might seem like the actions of this group of men might appear to be stating the obvious, these men should be commended for taking a stand against a crime that one woman every two minutes in America finds herself a victim of, according to the U.S. Department of Justice (http://feminist.com/

Many men might consider rape a women's issue that does not affect them. This is not true. If, according to the National Victim Center, 1,871 rapes occur per day, then rape is more of a man's issue - or problem - than one might realize.

It is also quite possible that any man's mother, sister, friend or girlfriend has been raped or will be raped in the future.

According to the Internet site of the Rape Prevention Education Program at the University of California-Davis (http://pubweb.ucdavis. edu/Documents/RPEP/actions.htm), there are actions men can take to prevent rape: Examine your own attitudes about women and men that might reflect misconceptions about rape. · Assertively interrupt jokes, comments or actions that lead to attitudes or situations that can cause rape. · Assist women with precautions that decrease their chances of becoming victims. · Support women's actions to take charge of their own lives, to be confident and strong.

· Listen to women's feelings about being victimized. Society has slowly begun to realize the widespread severity of rape and its consequences. Now it's time for the men - and women - of K-State to further educate themselves about this crime and put a stop to it.

Subscriptions

for Internet users limit options

njoy the World Wide Web while you can still afford it. The days of access to free information on the Web will soon go the way of the buffalo on the high plains.

Capitalistic pressures have already begun to shift the Net from an information bank, where data is the only currency, to an information marketplace, where information is a product bought and paid for in dollars and cents.

Capitalism will continue to encroach in spite of an Internet user community that spits nails when profit-minded entrepreneurs solicit its business via e-mail.

Web sites, which duplicate existing product channels, such as online versions of magazines that charge subscription fees to avoid displacing the paper version, are the advance runners.

As soon as enough users become resigned to the idea of identifying themselves and paying money for information, the range of services that can be bought and paid for will expand, and the practice of charging money for now-free services

Already a number of information vendors have devised ways of making money off casual Web users without demanding it up front. Many have set up their sites to force the consumer crawling through them to give up valuable demographical information that can then be packaged and resold to other companies for their marketing research.

The TV Guide website provides an excellent example of this process in motion. Until late last year, a user could run a simple search and discover the airing dates and times for a given TV show for the next two weeks.

This allowed TV Guide to gauge the popularity of TV shows by recording the number of times a given show was asked for, and, in turn, enabled TV Guide to increase the number of print subscriptions by concentrating its glossy coverage on the most popular shows.

Then, with all the avidity of an ivory poacher hunting elephants, the magazine started going after its Web users. The search was redesigned so that users had to fill out a complicated menu of options, including their ZIP codes, before the system would produce satisfactory results. TV Guide now knows, for example, how many wired people in ZIP code 66604 watch "The X-Files." Alternatively, users can register themselves with TV Guide and, by volunteering still more specific information, can receive email telling them which of their chosen shows will be on that day.

The advertising resistance of the typical Web user has already eroded to the point where a one-line plug for a product won't provoke retaliatory flaming. And of course, registration is but a first step in the long process of sucking Web users dry for money while giving them just enough in return to keep them from complaining indicated by their face value, other coins with the full amount of gold would be hoarded and so immediately disappear from circulation.

The present capitalization of the Web will conform to Gresham's law: Why should people waste time and effort putting out free information when they can make money off it or the people who want it? Right now, the non-subscribing Web user just pays a fixed overhead cost for access without additional charges for individual web sites, so that any information he or she takes from the Web is always more than worth the money it costs - that is, none at all - no matter how bad or inaccurate it

Subscribing users, on the other hand, pay money for a fixed return of information. The paid-for data drives the free out of circulation, just as bad money drives out

This phenomenon is doubly unfortunate because most of the free information is somehow useful.

For many users, the Web provides the only easy way to find the obscure information all of us need at one time or another such as the meaning of the DX coding on film cartridges, documentation for Spitz A3P planetariums or replacement battery specifications for 30-year-old cameras.

The idea of a Web designed to serve its users rather than entrepreneurs might be just another of history's burst bubbles, but that doesn't make its passing any less sad.

PARKING PERMIT INCREASE LEADS TO ELITISM

I have to admit to being one of those faculty members foolish enough to think, by attending the parking council's open hearing Thursday and participating in discussions, that logic could prevail. This was not to be, as the council voted 7-2 in favor of the increase.

All of the faculty participating explained this was a capricious and unsubstantiated act based on a perceived bias that somehow these spaces were elit-

By increasing the price from $150 to $500 over the past several years, it has indeed become elitist, as only faculty and staff with affordable means can stay in these spaces. Those spaces which were assigned based on need will now vanish

There could be no argument for these spaces if, in fact, there were adequate spaces for faculty and staff to park and have an equitable distance to traverse to teach their class, but this is not the case.

The faculty is under contract with the state of Kansas to be here at a certain time. To conduct class, I, as well as many other faculty members, have found it necessary to pay an additional rebate to the state to fulfill my

In the meeting, it was suggested by members of the parking council that the intent was to price the spaces out of reason so faculty would give up the spaces. These spaces would then be retired. I will be interested next year to see if my space is indeed reinred, as I fully intend to relinquish it, as I cannot afford it. Or, will the space be reassigned to a faculty member with a six-figure income who might not have my immediate need but definitely has the means?

I feel this act has come about as a result of faculty or administration wanting to remove the working faculty from these spaces so they themselves can acquire them.

One hundred years ago, the majority of Americans would have scoffed at the idea of an entire month of history donated to "Indians." Actually, many wholesome, white Americans would have just poked the barrel of their rifles out a moving train and tried to kill as many buffalo as possible. I hope no one will meander out to Yellowstone National Park and try to exterminate buffalo in unbridled celebration. Now I know it is hard to imagine this, but take a

Woman, 22, dies after abortion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — Medical officials said Monday they must await test results before determining the cause of death for a woman who died shortly after having an abortion at a clinic in St. Louis.

An autopsy was performed on the 22-year-old woman Saturday, but Rose Psara, chief investigator for the city medical examiner's office, said Monday the cause of death wouldn't be determined for several weeks.

The woman's name was not released.

Robert D. Crist of Overland Park, performed the surgery Friday at Reproductive Health Services.

When staff members noticed her vital signs were not improving afterward, she was taken to a hospital and died a short time later. The woman was in the first three months of her pregnancy

Crist has an unlisted phone number and could not be reached for comment by the Associated Press.

The woman was the third to die after having an abortion in Crist's care, said Patty Brous, president of Planned Parenthood of Mid-Missouri and Eastern Kansas in Kansas City, Mo. She said Crist has performed more than 100,000 abortions during his career

The death rate during abortion procedures is one in 167,000 abortions, Brous said.

"But that one death is tragic," she said.

"One death is too many." In St. Louis in 1981, a 19-year-died of severe bleeding hours after Crist performed an abortion on her, the Star said.

In Houston in 1991, a 17-year-old old woman under Crist's care died of a reaction to a painkiller, two days after the abortion, the Kansas City

Star reported Sunday.

He was cleared of any medical wrongdoing.

Brous said Crist was anxious for the autopsy results to find out what went wrong in Friday's case.

"It was a very uneventful abortion procedure," she said.

Architecture CD-ROM features 20 Austrian immigrants

In recent years, researchers disclosed that during World War II, the Swiss collected fine art and money stolen from Jews in Eastern Europe.

As recent as this year, new exhibitions and scholarship have shown how the United States "collected" artists, architects and scientists fleeing their homelands and Adolf

Hitler's persecution. The U.S. overlooked immigration requirements to let these celebrities into the country, while hundreds of thousands of innocent immigrants were turned away. And although this might not be forgivable, the cultural influence these invited intellectuals still possess over

American society is still very much alive. Its Austrian component is explored in a CD-ROM presentation, "Visionaries in Exile: A Cultural Journey from Austria to America," in Seaton Hall's Weigel

The CD-ROM focuses on 20

Austrian architects who immigrated to America in the early 20th century. Names like Victor Gruen, Richard Neutra, Rudolf Schindler and Joseph Urban might not sound familiar, but these visionary architects continue to inspire contemporary architects. If the names are foreign to Kansans, it might have more to do with the majority of them working in New York or Los Angeles, where the recent show "Exiles and Emigres" thoroughly explores the same topic in a wider vein. This presentation, along with a brief exhibition of prints of contemporary and traditional Austrian architecture found in the entrance lobby, was organized by Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture. Kremer discovered the availability of the show from reading "Austria Kultur," a publication of the U.S.-based Austrian Cultural Institute, which created the show

Kremer, who has seen the groundbreaking L.A. exhibition, said the CD-ROM introduces visitors to work by a group of architects who are not wellknown in the U.S.

Kremer said he tried to involve other cultural institutions in town to provide similar thematic programming but had no such luck.

"Many of these architects were actively engaged in philosophical and intellectual dialogues with other people in other fields," he said. "The CD-ROM is not solely about buildings, but the connections to other issues - social,

WEDNESDAY The K-State men's golf team concludes the final round of the Big 12 Golf Tournament in Hutchinson at the Prairie Dunes Country Club.

Crews have good showing at Midwest Rowing Championships

JEREMY KELLEY

The K-State women's crew competed Saturday and Sunday in the Midwest Rowing Championships against some of the Midwest's toughest competition.

K-State sent two novice eight boats, a varsity four and a novice four to Madison, Wis., where the women's crew raced against Big 10 powers Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan and Ohio State.

"Their region, as far as competitiveness, has completely turned on its side in the last couple of years," K-State head crew coach Jenny Hale said. "The whole field was really impressive."

On a course of 1850 meters, as opposed to the regular 2,000 meters, the first novice eights boat finished third with a time of 6:33, behind Ohio State and Iowa. The novice boat is actually the varsity boat K-State has been racing all season, minus a couple of rowers.

"It's sort of like comparing apples to apples," Hale said. "We put together our fastest boat, but prioritized a novice boat."

K-State's time in the first novice race put them in the Petite Final. The top two crew from each heat were placed in a Grand Final of six boats. K-State finished second in the Petite Final with a time of 6:40.2, which ranked them eighth out of 21 boats overall.

"This regatta really gave the girls a test," assistant coach Deb Morgan said. "This is the first regatta where we were at an equal level with the other competition. I think they found out what the sport is really about."

The second novice eights race boasted just 10 boats and was limited to three heats, with the top two from each heat advancing to the Grand Final.

The second novice eights boat finished third in its heat with a time of 6:52 behind Iowa and Michigan. In the Grand Final, K-State finished fifth with a time of 6:39.7. K-State ran in third for most of the race but was edged by Iowa and Michigan down the K-State's spring walk-ons qualified for the Grand Final in the first novice fours race and finished fourth out of 16 boats with a time of 7:44.1, 20 seconds behind eventual champion, Wisconsin.

"The novice fours really raced a nice race," Hale said. "They are not quite up to speed in terms of varsity level. I definitely think we have more speed in us. We're between a rock and a hard place because we don't have those varsity rowers.

The varsity fours finished fourth in its heat with a time of 7:09.3, which secured them a spot in the Petite Final where they finished second in the field, but finished eighth out of 16 boats overall.

Morgan said she was pleased with the progress and the toughness that the crew showed over the weekend.

"I'm not surprised they did so well, rather impressed," she said. "I can't think of anytime where anyone said 'No,' and they weren't at all intimidated."

The K-State men's crew, who currently attains a club status, competed at the same regatta where they raced in four different

The men's novice four finished third in its heat with a time of 6:36.3 and advanced to the Petite Final where it won the race and finished seventh overall.

The men's novice eights boat placed fifth in their heat with a time of 6:21.2 and did not advance to a final round.

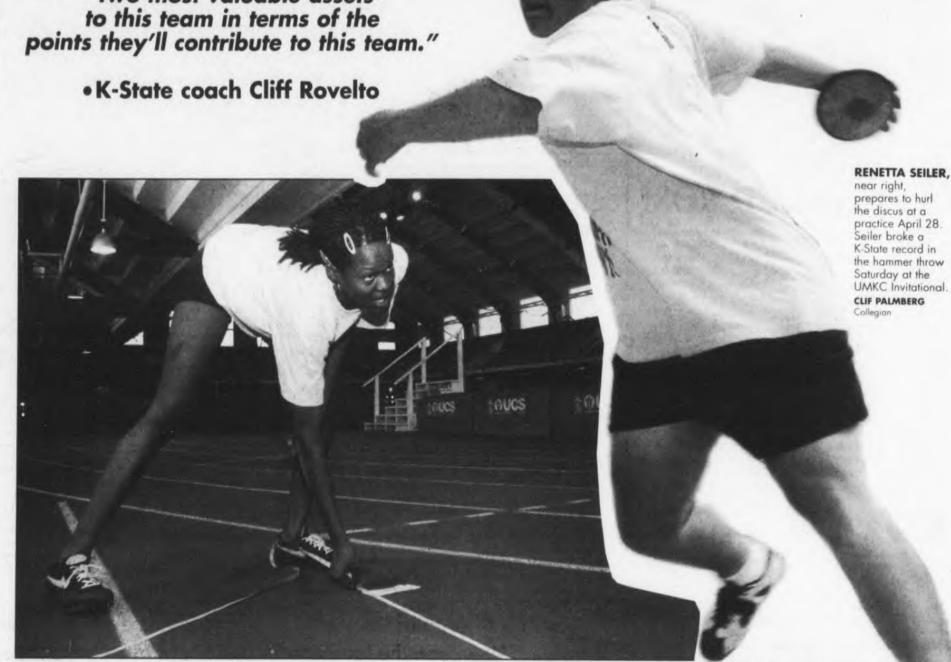

K-State advanced to the Grand Final in the varsity lightweight fours after crossing the finish line in third place behind

Northwestern and Grand Valley. In the Grand Final, K-State had its highest finish of the day after it placed fourth with a time of 6:44.5. The men placed fourth out of 12 boats. The men's boat of varsity eights finished fifth in their heat and advanced to the Petite Final and finished ninth out of nine

The Midwest Rowing Championships was probably the final regatta of the year for the men's crew.

ame old Vanitta Kinard. Same old Renetta Seiler.

Both K-State track and field athletes won their respective events Saturday at the UMKC Invitational at the SRC Outdoor Track Complex in Kansas City, Mo.

"Without question, they are the two most valuable assets to this team in terms of the points they'll contribute to this team," K-State coach Cliff Royelto said.

Seiler blitzed the old K-State record in the hammer throw, cruising past the competition with a throw of 198'11", a mark which ranks her third in the nation behind South Carolina's Lisa Misipeka and Dawn Ellerbe. Seiler's previous best was a 195'5" mark she set at the Kansas Relays a week ago. "Renetta improved in her event, and that's not a surprise," Rovelto said. "She's get a third event, too, in the shot, and she's coming around in that, and that's big.

Seiler won the discus with a toss of 163'9" - an NCAA provisional mark, and also improved her numbers in the shot put with a toss of 45'6-1/2'

"I'm getting more experience and getting more chances of getting better throws now," Seiler said. "Mentally, I'm getting tougher, and that's a direct reflection on my throws

Seiler said she was more impressed with her distance in the shot put - the highest mark and her personal best of the outdoor season thus far

The shot put is something that I am working on, and I was more surprised with it than I am with my hammer because I am throwing the hammer really well," she said.

Kinard continued to dominate the triple jump field. Her jump of 45'1/2" automatically qualified her for the NCAA Outdoor Championships to take place in Bloomington, Ind., June 4-7. Kinard also won the long jump with a mark of 20'5-3/4"

"I was really consistent at 44 feet, so I knew 45 was coming," Kinard said. "I think 46 is right around the corner now." Kinard, who now sits second in the nation in the triple jump, said she was trying to improve in the long jump to give her the chance of making it to nationals in the event. "I'm just provisional in that right now, I'm not automatic. But I wasn't too sure I have that chance to go to nationals and compete in the long jump," she said. Both Kinard and Seiler rank high in their respective events. Kinard's triple jump mark ranks second in the nation. Seiler's hammer throw mark, as aforementioned, ranks third in the Kinard said she had loftier goals for this outdoor season. If she remains at No. 2 in the nation, she qualifies for the United States Outdoor Championships and could have a chance to compete in the World Championship in Athens, Greece, in August.

"That's always been my goal and I think I can get there," Kinard said. "I'm jumping really well right now, but usually at the outdoor championship (the NCAA Tournament) is where I peak. Hopefully that will happen this year."

Seiler had the same aspirations. "That would be awesome. That would be so awesome," she said. "It's kind of amazing, because at the beginning of the year all I wanted to do was hit 170 feet because I threw 169 last year.

Now my goal is to hit at least 200." The track and field team also boasted four other provisional qualifiers for the NCAA Tournament. Kirsten Schultz took first in the javelin with a heave of 161'1", and Anna Whitham placed third in the hammer throw with a mark of 162'8"

K-State high jumper Wanita Dykstra won the event with a jump of 5'8-1/4". Emily Diederich ran a time of 55.80, which took top honors in the in the 400-meter dash, and Belinda Hope won the 200-meter dash with a time of 24.38.

On the men's side, in just his second outdoor meet of the year, high jumper Ed Broxterman nabbed provisional qualifying marks as he won the event with a leap of 7'1-3/4'

"That was his highest jump in outdoors yet," Rovelto said. "He jumped great, considering, and he even missed a couple Gene Petersen staked his claim in the shot put as he won the event with a toss of 56'11-1/2" Meanwhile in Des Moines, Iowa, the relays team of David Dominguez, Ryan Johnson, Kevin Lewis and Scott Galas won the 4 x 800-meter relays at the Drake Relays with a time of 7:24.86. "Kevin Lewis ran a couple seconds faster than he has run. In this day and age, it's pretty tough when you've got guys running their times at 1:52 and under," Rovelto said. "I'm not surprised that they were right in the thick of things. Chris May finished fourth in the 1,500-meter run with a time

Fashion advances for 1997 merely mirror fashion of 1980s

Is fashion really advancing, or is it repeating the past? After hearing about the fall 1997 runway fashion show in New York, I've decided I'm never getting rid of any clothes. Styles are bound to

In 1997 we have to look backward to move forward in fashion. I hope you've all kept your parachute pants, because the 1980s are making a comeback.

It's scary to think of all the styles we have stolen from our past. The fashion industry has created the 1970s all over again, as well as the 1920s and 1940s. I've acquired an uncertain feeling about what the industry email at (lkf8410@ksv.edu). will next reveal. In another couple of years, I envision poodle skirts and bobby socks.

But the 80s. What was so fashionably great about the 80s? It couldn't have been the color fluorescent and trendy Swatch watches. Let's see, how many could we fit on one

I never realized what an awful decade the world had created. We layered shirts, rolled jeans and ratted bangs to hazardous heights. Who can forget stacking different colored socks over one another? I always had to buy a shoe size larger for comfort purposes.

Madonna was my idol, and "Pretty in Pink" was the hottest movie around. I saw the Jackson Five in concert when Tito was considered cool. I wore a white glove, side ponytail, and penny loafers. In '80s vernacular, I was total-

Surprisingly, the fashion runways formed a vision of an 80s-type woman for fall 1997. Pin-striped suits are back in style, along with man-tailored jackets and trousers. It seems that fashion this fall will project a new businesslike attitude.

In other words, it's time to hit the thrift stores. There are several racks of men's gray and black pants. Don't be shy, ladies - men's pants are a cheap supplement for what could cost a fortune

Another 80s flashback is the use of shoulder pads. You know, darlings, last year they told us to lose shoulder pads, to express a higher self-esteem and well being. Now, after all my shoulder pads are cut out, they're making a comeback? Why can't we all just become fashion cordial? The 80s fashion is supposed to create a less permissive woman and man of the 1990s. The Philadelphia Inquirer gave a helpful list of should-haves for next fall.

1. Black leather

Pin-stripes, grays and suits . Shoulder pads and cuffed trousers

4. Halter tops

5. Cheetah, leopard and tiger prints 6. A little black dress, preferably in velvet and lace

7. Fur on trims and coats

Keep in mind that not all styles look great on everyone. Wear clothes that accentuate the good parts of your body. As for the fashion return of the 80s, why not? The New Kids On The Block are in dire need of a new album.

Shopping on Thursday evenings has been lively for the past 15 weeks.

Live jazz, classical, country and rock 'n' roll music have echoed through the corridors of Manhattan

"MTC Live," a music competition sponsored by the mall's shops and local radio stations, began in mid-Jan-

It will end with a final competition that begins at 5:30 p.m. Thursday in the food court.

Amateur musicians will have the chance to play for an audience while competing for big prizes. The first-place winner will receive $800. The second-place prize is $500, and the third-place prize is

Each Thursday night, four to five bands have played 20 minutes worth of music for seven judges. The judges are new each week, and they consist of store employees and radio personnel. Contestants were rated on audience appeal, musicianship, stage presence and talent potential. "The turnouts have been real good, a lot of crowd support," said Monnie Applegate, marketing direc-

"I like to write my own songs, but cover stuff is always a hit with crowds," said Rick Davis, sountry vocalist semi-finalist and senior in feed science and agriculture technology management.

The weekly concerts in the mall have developed a crowd, and each contestant brings its own fans.

"I came to support my boyfriend, Rick Davis. He is definitely going to win it all," Amanda Groce, junior in elementary education, said.

Semi-finals were April 10, 17 and Thursday. The semi-finalist winners were awarded prizes including portable compact disc players and tickets to Country Stampede that will be this summer. The semi-finalists will compete in finals Thursday.

"I don't think my chances of winning are very good. I'm just glad I made it this far," Davis said.

Trainers at Rec Complex tend to all types of injuries

While standing in the training room, Steven Lloyd, graduate assistant in kinesiology, examined the nose of a fellow student. He placed his hands about the nasal region, feeling for pressure points. He diagnosed a broken nose, and referred the patient to Lafene Health Center.

Student trainers at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex encounter injuries such as this every day.

"The main purpose of athletic trainers is prevention and care of athletic injuries," Lloyd said

"Usually, the type of injuries we see depend on the season. If it is wrestling season, then we see a lot of shoulder injuries, and if it is basketball season, then we see more sprained ankles and knee injuries."

The trainers at the Rec Complex offer a variety of services to students who use the complex. They wrap and tape ankles, ice sprained ankles, loan out crutches and apply first aid to athletic injuries.

"I am very impressed with the athletic trainers," John Culbertson, senior in civil engineering, said.

"They have taped my ankles a number of times and can immediately diagnose an injury after it has occurred. They should be commended for their work.

The training staff consists of four individuals - two student trainers, one graduate assistant and one specialist from Lafene. Robyn Stone, senior in physical therapy, and David Stuever, senior in physical therapy, are the student trainers. Lloyd is the graduate assistant, and Lanny Leroy is from

The training program is sponsored by the Erickson Sportsmedicine Clinic at Lafene Health Center.

The most complex situation Lloyd said he has encountered was a head-on collision during softball.

After the collision, one individual was knocked unconscious.

Lloyd then called an ambulance and stabilized the head and neck. The individual was then taken to Lafene for further assis-

"I was very intense the first time I dealt with an unconscious patient," Lloyd said.

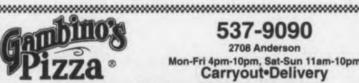

Working at the Rec Complex has offered students a chance to experience realworld situations.

"Right now, I am in the middle of the job-hunting process, and I've received great hands-on experience working at the Rec. I hope to end up working for a Division I school or a professional hockey team,"

Lloyd and Leroy are certified athletic trainers. The most important skills are the use of standard first aid and CPR, Lloyd

"I've seen so many different injuries, where someone working with so many different athletic teams won't usually see." Lloyd said. "I get to experience the injuries

Identification of pilot's remains answers 1 question, leaves others

PHOENIX (AP) - The Air Force has Colorado, where it was found. solved part of the mysterious disappearance of Capt. Craig Button, determining through a DNA match that he was in his A-10 Thunderbolt that crashed into a snowy Colorado mountainside.

But military officials said Monday that the force with which Button's warplane crashed might have obliterated clues as to why the 32-year-old pilot veered off from a routine training mission in southwestern Arizona.

"There's a legitimate concern that we might never know what caused Capt. Button to fly north," said Capt. Leo

Devine, a Pentagon spokesman. Button broke off from the training mission on April 2. The Air Force tracked the $9 million plane's northeasterly path into

Button's parents learned Sunday that their son was killed. The military used DNA records and tissue specimens from the wreckage to positively identify the remains as Button's.

"We are pretty much up on it all. We don't want to say anything at this time. Please understand," Richard Button said Monday in a phone interview from his home in Massapequa, N.Y.

"Craig was a wonderful young man. This is an inexplicable tragedy," said family friend John Conroy, who has been having a daily vigil with his wife and Button's parents since the pilot disappeared.

Now that the military knows where the A-10 and its pilot ended up, officials said they aren't certain if they'll ever know why it was there. The main problem is evidence.

The Air Force retrieved two small pieces of the plane, including plastic-insulated tubing and wires and a section of metal, before officials postponed the salvage operation until the snow melts.

The longer the search through the wreckage is delayed, the longer the remains will be subject to weather and wildlife, which might make it impossible to learn whether Button suffered from hypoxia, a condition that cuts oxygen, or another health problem.

"The recovery operation is at a halt and that'll play a big role - when they go back," said Chris Kelly of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in Washington. "That is, if there's anything there."

McKee has received many awards

Unlike commercial planes, the A-10 was not equipped with a flight data recorder with information about the plane and the pilot. That means there is no record of why Button made the initial turn over southwestern Arizona, said Lt. Keith Shepherd, spokesman at the Davis-Monthan Air Force Base in Tucson.

"The only clue would be if there is something mechanically wrong with the aircraft and that piece managed to survive. And then maybe that would be a clue as possibly why Capt. Button did what he did," Shepherd said. "But it'd still be spec-

The Air Force won't send searchers back to the mountain until conditions are safer, but the investigation into Button's life before April 2 continues, Devine said.

Police search for leopard that killed OKC woman

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — A leopard burst out of its cage at an animal sanctuary and killed a woman Monday morning, then escaped into a rural area where sharpshooters were sent to hunt it down.

Sheriff John Whetsel said the woman was attacked in a fenced run at the Oak Hill Center for Rare and Endangered Species. The 60- to 70-pound leopard apparently used its weight to force open its locked cage to get into the run.

The body of the 52-year-old woman was found by her son, who works at the center. Her name was not released.

"All I can say is, it was a savage attack," Whetsel said.

The center rehabilitates injured exotic animals before returning them to zoos around the country. Whetsel said it was licensed by the state Wildlife Department and U.S. Department of Agriculture, and that he knew of no previous problems. Whetsel said officers searching for the leopard were ordered to shoot to kill.

"Our concern is once an animal kills human, it has a propensity to do it again. We're not going to take any chances," Whetsel said.

Officers went door to door warning residents in lightly populated far northeastern Oklahoma County. Whetsel urged them not to try to hunt the animal

After the exchange, the armed group left the Rowes' home and authorities didn't know where they were within the forested, mountainous development of widely separated homes. Reporters were being kept several miles from the entrance to the community, about 175 miles southeast of El Paso.

The attack followed months of conflict between Joe Rowe, head of the remote community's property owners' association, and McLaren.

The group's members contend they are the legitimate government of Texas, which they say was illegally annexed as a state in 1845. Texas was an independent republic from 1836 to 1845.

McLaren's news release called on Texans to push for a referendum to decide whether they want to become an independent nation.

He has compared his situation to the deadly government standoffs at Waco and Ruby Ridge, Idaho. "These boys are asking for a total mil-

Christian Court issues orders to Graves, legislators

MAN CLAIMS Graves, nine legislators are felons, orders they leave political office.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - A man saying he represents the "Supreme Court of Christian Jurisdiction in American Government" has told Gov. Bill Graves and nine legislators they are felons and ordered them to leave office.

The orders, contained in a document sent to them, claim the Legislature is acting illegally and its members, Graves and justices of the state Supreme Court have not taken a proper oath of fiery end to the siege of the Branch Davidian oath of office," Graves said, referring to his office. The orders also say the Supreme Court justices are practicing law without licenses.

Among legislators named as being notified are House Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, and Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park. The order accuses them of perjury, official misconduct and misuse of public funds.

The orders are signed by Mark Kline Drake of Rock, a small town 20 miles southeast of Wichita in Cowley County. His wife confirmed his participation in the Christian Court and referred questions to him. She said he was not available for comment Tuesday.

The orders are dated April 19 - the second anniversary of the federal building bombing in Oklahoma City and the fourth anniversary of the compound in Waco, Texas. It is also the date the Christian Court met in Abilene.

The orders come as some local law enforcement officials are expressing concern about what they see as an increase in activities by anti-government groups of "freemen."

Graves received his notice, spokesman Mike Matson said, and his counsel passed it on to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

"Obviously, there's concern, given what's going on in Texas," Matson said, referring to a standoff between law enforcement officials and an armed group demanding nation status for Texas.

Graves seemed not to take the order seriously. "I have a vague recollection of standing on the south steps with my hand on a Bible, taking the

January 1995 inauguration at the Statehouse. During a news conference, a reporter jokingly asked the governor, "Are you going to resign now that they've indicted you?"

Graves, smiling, replied: "It's a tough call, but I think I'll stay."

Other legislators mentioned in the notices are Sen. Greta Hall Goodwin, D-Winfield, and Reps. Gayle Mollenkamp, R-Russell Springs; Jan Pauls, D-Hutchinson; Richard Reinhardt, D-Erie; Dale Swenson, R-Wichita; Dan Thimesch, D-Cheney; and Billie Vining, R-Wichita.

Notices also went to Shawnee County Sheriff Dave Meneley and Attorney General Carla Stovall, ordering them to arrest and prosecute Graves for damages done to the Kansas state republic.

"It wasn't so funny, I would be sad,"

Mollenkamp said of his notice. "I'm definitely concerned deep down."

In a letter to Mollenkamp, Drake said, "The Christian court, by authority established in 'The Supreme Court of Christian Jurisdiction In American Government,' is that spiritual means of lawfully finding and following 'truth' - the spirit of truth mentioned in the Bible."

It adds: "The Christian Court is the lawful answer to correct the 'abuse of power' by the unlawful, executive, legislative and judicial branches of government.'

Reinhardt said he believes he received a notice because Drake was a fraternity brother in college. Reinhardt graduated from K-State in 1955 and said he last heard from Drake six or McLaren and his followers have been holed up in the mountain community since Sunday, when they took two neighbors hostage in retaliation for the arrest of two followers. They released both hostages Monday in exchange for one of the jailed comrades, who had been arrested on weapons charges.

By Tuesday, nearly 100 state and federal officers were stationed within two miles of the trailer the group calls its embassy in the rugged Davis Mountains, 175 miles southeast of El Paso.

Officers negotiated with the group by telephone.

"We're very positive, very optimistic," said Mike Cox, spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety.

Cox said 13 people - all adults - were holed up. The group has demanded the release of the other jailed follower, a woman arrested on contempt charges. McLaren has also demanded a statewide referendum on independence for Texas.

SEDIMENT CAUSES CAMPUS WATER TO APPEAR DIRTY.

Sediment in pipes stirred up Tuesday afternoon might cause water to appear dirty today on the south side of the K-State campus around Anderson and Durland halls, Randy Slover, director of K-State facilities, said.

"There will be some murky water from the sediment," he said.

The water is safe to drink and this type of disturbance is not uncommon, Slover said.

ZAIRIAN LEADER AND REBEL LEADER AGREE TO MEET.

LUBUMBASHI, Zaire - Rebel leader Laurent Kabila and President Mobutu Sese Seko agree they will meet one another, but the rebels said Tuesday there is only one thing to discuss: Mobutu's departure from power.

U.S. envoy Bill Richardson talked with Kabila for three hours Tuesday night in this southeastern city. Both parties have agreed to meet, he said, but details about the venue and date remain unresolved.

"As you heard Kabila say, he's agreed to face-to-face talks. Mobutu has agreed to face-to-face talks. They are ready to proceed as soon as possible, this weekend or earlier," Richardson said.

South Africa has offered to have the talks held on one of its naval supply ships, which would be anchored in international waters off the coast of Zaire and Angola.

CAMERA ON HUBBLE TELESCOPE RECOVERS SOME OF ITS FOCUS.

WASHINGTON - A $105 million infrared camera on the Hubble Space Telescope has recovered some of its focus, raising hopes that it might yet prove fully functional, NASA said Tuesday.

Project researches arthritis in horses

CAMI SOWERS

Stiff joints, loss of movement and lameness in horses are some of the ailments that K-State researchers are trying to remedy.

A horse is considered to be one of the ultimate athletes, said James Lillich, assistant professor of clinical sciences at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Arthritis damages the muscularskeletal system and is the No. 1 cause for wastage, which is loss of function, in Lillich started on this project last fall, but he said he has had the idea in his head for a few years.

A model is being used to create arthritis in horses. Previous models have used methods of injecting toxins in the joint and creating articular cartilage

The model being used at K-State is a cast immobilization model. A cast is put on the leg of the horse for six weeks and it eventually makes the cartilage weak and exposes it to damage.

Treadmilling and exercising the horse for eight weeks shows damages and inflammation of the joints that are about a grade two. Grade two damage signifies damage and pain that are visible through a head bob. Grade four is seen as a more visible head bob or limp, and grade five is non-weight bearing, Lillich said.

"Exercise is a good thing as long as pain and inflammation are taken away, because the body works best when it is in a normal load," Lillich said.

Lillich said his goal is to get a model that is repeatable and be able to duplicate the disease safely and humanely, but also he will be able to look at a variety of medications that would hold up the progression of the disease or return the joint to the best possible function.

Drugs that are used in the animals are limited. Steroids are used in the horses to stop inflammation, but do not reverse damage.

"With some science, you wind up studying the model, not the disease,' Lillich said. "It is very difficult to get a group of individuals that all have the same degree of disease."

The animals are not subjected to a painful process. It is a wear and tear process and the researchers are looking at the chronic, everyday pains.

X-rays only show bony growth in the joints and by the time an X-ray shows anything is wrong, a significant amount of damage has been done. Synovial fluid and blood are taken from the affected area and looked at for many weeks.

Researchers look for markers of the disease so they can detect it and treat it much quicker and easier, Lillich said.

"I'm looking at things cells produce and release as they are diseased and it should be in the blood or synovial fluid,"

Proteins and cell by-products that are released are looked at and cytology is used to look at the cells from the synovial fluid. A protein analysis is also done. Further diagnostic work on joints is not done as often.

When arthritis is spotted in most horses, they are then used for work, leasure riding or are "pasture potatoes," Lillich said.

Fusing joints is one way of relieving some of the pain in horses, but joint replacement is not used because a horse's bone is very thick and hard.

"Horses aren't meant to be on three legs, they have to be on four legs," Lillich said. "They are prone to damaging themselves when they are on three legs and they don't lay down."

The horses that are used in the models are not client animals, but will be like clinical cases they may see, so the doctors will be able to help a person who brings in an animal with joint problems, Lillich said.

"We do not do any prospective research on client animals," Lillich said.

The clinic gets the animals from suppliers for the purpose of research. Healthy horses are received from the suppliers and while the horses are in the program, a high quality of life is maintained for them.

Most of the studies are terminal studies, but if a pilot study works, which uses only a few horses, a herd of five or six can be maintained that have the same degree of lameness and damage in the

Over time, rest and training can be looked at to see how the horse can be kept going if it has a bad joint.

This is prospective information. We don't know if we have this model," Lillich said. "These are our goals. We are trying to answer some small questions, but not forget the big picture."

Athletes commonly receive Most Valuable Player awards, and some people believe administrators should receive MVPs, too.

"Dr. Pat Bosco is one of K-State's most valuable players," President Jon Wefald said. "He could very well win the MVP."

Pat Bosco is associate vice president of institutional advancement and dean of student life.

His work reaches departments all over campus including admissions, new student services, the Office of the Registrar, student financial assistance, the Department of Housing and Dining Services, the K-State Student Union, recreational services, Greek Affairs and student life programming.

Bosco has taught undergraduate and graduate courses in the areas of leadership and volunteerism for the College of Education for the past 12 years.

He is the director of the Center of Leadership Development, a private consulting agency that provides services to business and government institutions, community agencies, national leadership groups and colleges and uni-

"It is a very unique position in a large school. It exemplifies Jon Wefald's leadership style, because of being very close to the student. And it allows us to be as responsible as we can be," Bosco said. "It has helped us in putting students first.'

Bosco has done various jobs at K-State, including assistant vice president for institutional advancement, director of enrollment management, assistant vice president for educational and student services, assistant dean of students and director of student activities.

Bosco graduated from Onondaga Community College in Syracuse, N.Y. in 1969. He received his bachelor's of science degree in elementary education from K-State in 1971 and his master's of science in educational administration in 1973. He later received his doctorate in higher educational administration from the University of Nebraska in While Bosco was working on his undergraduate degree in 1970-71, he was student body president.

Issues that Bosco faced as a student body president included students voting on the Faculty Senate, 24-hour visitation in residence halls, teacher course evaluation and the initial stages of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Bosco has seen a change in student government during his time at K-State.

"K-State has become a lot more sophisticated in approaches to addressing complex problems," Bosco said. Student government at K-State has grown immeasurably over the last two decades and its impact on institutional environment, like the Recreation Complex and the library, stand as examples of how the impact of student government has grown, leveraging student activity fee monies with legislative support and private donations.

'I don't think our student leaders today spend any less time than we spent with student government activities, but they are a lot smarter in the way they use their time and energy," he said.

Bosco began his work at K-State in summer 1971 right after his graduation from K-State. His first assignment was advising student government in the Office of Student Activities and Student Studies.

During his time in this office he became the first coordinator of student activities on the campus

As the school year slouches to a close and graduates are poised to enter the consumer entrappings of the real world, let us ponder the year in campus scandals and try, just try, to understand why it all happened.

The biggest scandal of them all is still brewing in a let's-just-hope-everyone-forgets, Whitewater-eque miasma.

The missing money from the Student Governing Association foundation account has yet to turn up.

Do you have it? I checked my apartment, and I just couldn't find it. Have you tried checking those blue shorts you wore last Friday? It never

Of course, I'd wager you'd have to cram pretty hard to get the rumored-to-be six-figure sum that disappeared in a series of years into your pants. In an effort for objectivity, I will now state that, yes, I was a student senator during one of those years. And I will also state that my Bal Harbour condo was purchased before my employment, er ... service with SGA.

Not that the missing money is really hurting SGA. The foundation account is a sort of insurance policy used only when necessary for nonreoccurring expenditures.

In my years at K-State, I haven't seen this account used much at all. However, the thousands upon thousands of dollars embezzled from the account are seriously hurting our return on investment because we're collecting interest on less money than we had five years ago. I hope you're listening, Mr. Greenspan.

at experts or

No one has been charged for this crime, yet. The Kansas Bureau of Investigation is still working on it. Come to find out the investigator charged with tracing the money trail has been on medical leave for more than a week and won't be back for another couple weeks. And even then he will only be working a "light" load.

Hold onto your hats for this next one.

The allocations committee chairperson at the time tried to expose this early in the semester and at least initiate some procedural changes to keep this from happening. But, this never happened. Who was this chairperson? Chris Avila.

Does that ring a bell? Try infusing some credibility into his story now, post-scandal. Not gonna happen.

Now, folks, I'm no conspiracy theorist or college graduate, but I can connect the dots when they are numbered. The two people who know the most about this situation have experienced recent mysterious, unexplainable phenomena. While one was eventually convicted, the KBI doesn't have much of an excuse. I suppose they're too busy, as is our city government and administration, investigating the difference between a boulevard and a road (we're not

I suggest we form two legislative committees, one for the House and Senate, and get to the bottom of the SGA money scandal. However, I insist that a minor Hollywood celebrity chair the Senate committee because that's the only way to get the big media interested. (Is Jimmie Walker

Why is this embezzlement scandal a big hooha? It's your money. The cash you pour into student fees each semester has probably gone to purchase cars, furniture, fabulous electronic equipment and Beanie Babies. Yes, even those cute little hot items. Sad, isn't it?

But, gentle reader, are you driving those "hot" cars? Are you enjoying hours of fun using ill-gotten electronic equipment? I certainly hope not. Because that would be illegal. It seems we've forgotten that.

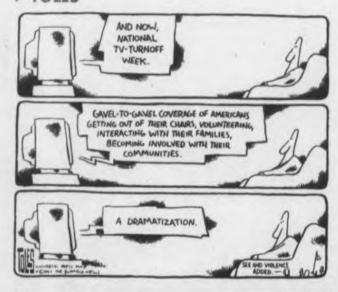

Who committed these vile acts remains only rumor and gossip. I have my suspicions, as do many other campus talking heads, but I will reserve my comments for a later date because we just might find a smoking gun we all never con-

Once the cheerfully recovered KBI investigator gets back on the job, the KBI has said his cases will be shored up - meaning we can expect some final action on these cases in four to six weeks.

At this point, the investigation findings will be handed over to either the state attorney general (God help us all, we don't want this to turn into one of the hellcat's political image issues) or the county attorney. The folks at KBI think it will go to the county, but we'll see once we find out just how juicy are the details.

Let's try to keep it in our memory banks during the summer and come back in the fall demanding full disclosure in an open questionand-answer period starring Anderson Hall. I'll make the T-shirts.

CROSSING LARAMIE STREET REQUIRES CARE AND ATTENTION

I am eight years old. My mother told me that students at Manhattan Christian College are afraid to cross Laramie Street. I feel sorry for them.

You college students don't have to be afraid. Just be careful. If there is a crosswalk, use it. If there is a crossing guard, do what he says. Always look both ways. If a car is coming fast, wait until it goes by or comes to a full stop. Then you can cross

Any street can be dangerous, but if you know how to act, you don't have to be afraid. A police officer came to our school once and showed us how to be careful. Maybe he can come to your school too.

• READERS APPRECIATE PROMPT RENOVATIONS AT FRANK MEYERS FIELD

This letter is regarding an issue I was concerned about at Frank Myers Field.

While attending a baseball game with four people in wheelchairs, I noticed the park was not handicap accessible. The problems I found concerned handicap parking, seating for wheelchairs, handicap bathroom facilities and the gravel walk-All of these problems made it very difficult to get people in wheelchairs around the park. Beçause of my concerns, I contacted several people in Disabled Student Services and Department Intercollegiate Athletics. Two days after making contact with them, I was informed that the renovations would start in the upcoming month.

I would like to thank Gretchen Holden, director of Disabled Student Services; Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum; and the athletic department for such a quick response.

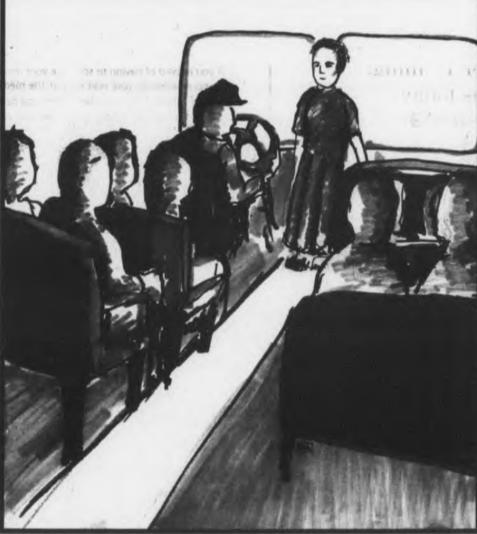

Three of the four problems I brought to their attention have already been resolved. There are now four handicap parking spaces, a handicap-accessible bathroom and the gravel has been modified by limestone chip covering the walkway.

I greatly appreciate this improvement, as I am sure fans with physical disabilities do,

Thanks again for the quick and cooperative response on this

SMITH MARY RENEE SMITH is a junior in theatre. You can e-mail your comments to Mary at (mojo@ksu.edu).

It's nearing the end of the semester. I'm tired. We are all tired. I'm really, really tired. And now I'm waiting for something powerful to happen.

Rosa Parks. She was tired. She worked a long day. She just wanted to pay for the ride and get on the bus. She just wanted to sit down and rest her tired bones. But, no, Rosa knew she was supposed to pay the toll for the bus ride in the front of the bus, get back off the bus, walk to the back and then get on the bus.

I don't claim to know what was going on in Rosa Parks' mind that fateful day, but I don't think it was the civil rights movement, racial equality or any kind of revolution. Rosa

Rosa Parks quietly paid her toll and sat down in the front of the bus. There was no fanfare, no media circus, no controversy at the moment. It was all very simple. A tired woman got to rest. The rest is history. Tonight on ABC, history will happen, only this time millions will be there to watch. Once again, it isn't fueled by anyone seeking to make a grand statement or to change the world; history will be made by someone who is tired. A tired woman will finally get to

Tired of living the way others say she has too, tired of lying and tired of trying to be something she's not, Ellen is coming out. I won't bore you with the details. Part of me knows writing this column is like beating a dead horse. You would have had to been living in a hole for the past few months to not know. What is being proclaimed as the world's first, prime-time lead gay character is coming out tonight.

I'll be honest. I don't think "Ellen" is incredibly funny. I hadn't planned to watch the infamous episode tonight. Then I watched "20/20" Friday night.

Ellen DeGeneres was being interviewed, and I heard those words: "I'm tired." I don't remember the rest of what she said, but it struck me then. She knows it, too. DeGeneres told the story of Rosa Parks. With tears in her eyes, Ellen said she is just tired of riding on the back of the bus

There are two kinds of people who change history. There are leaders, those like Martin Luther King Jr. and Mahatma Gandhi, who with great effort and energy lead and make change. Their followers, people who are tired from oppression of one kind or another, are empowered by the energy and dedication of these leaders.

The other kind of people who make things change are more like you and me - just tired. How many times have we heard the word "tired" from grass roots movements? "Tired" is the motto of most movements.

People who are tired of seeing crime in their neighborhoods or tired of being afraid to walk down the street. Parents who are tired of fearing for their children's safety or citizens tired of taxation without representation

Our country was founded by people tired of oppression. We can't all be energetic leaders or dedicated activists, and that's OK. We are the huddled masses, tired followers. Most of us live our lives, go through the day-to-day motions and do what we can to survive. Someday, something will do it, though. Someday we'll get tired. We'll get tired of being discriminated against. We'll get tired of rising cable TV bills. We'll get tired of our children dying in the streets. We'll get tired of paying high student fees. What ever it is, we'll get tired and do something.

• OWNERS RESPONSIBLE FOR ACTIONS OF DOGS

First of all, I'd like to extend a sincere apology to the family of Christopher Wilson. He did not deserve to die, let alone in such a brutal manner.

The main reason I am writing, though, is in defense of rottweilers and all other breeds of dogs that are often labeled as killers. I cringed on Friday and again on Monday as I opened the Collegian and saw headlines with words such as "mauled" and "threat" used in the same sentences as "rottweiler."

I honestly believe that dogs, for the most part, do not know the difference between right and wrong. They are taught by their owners what is right and wrong. How a dog acts and responds to certain things is often dictated by what its owners have taught it and how the dog has been treated.

I feel that it is indeed justice that the owners of the dogs that killed Christopher have been charged with involuntary manslaughter.

My family has owned a rottweiler for the past three years and not once has he ever been aggressive toward my family or any of the neighbor children who come over and play with him.

I feel to label a whole breed of dogs as a "potential threat" because of one unfortunate accident is misleading. I am sure that other rottweiler owners would agree with me when I say they can be as gentle as a poodle.

Jeremy Platt sophomore in marketing CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IS JUSTIFIABLE REVENGE

Jeff Chan missed the point why there is a death penalty in his column Friday. It is not about saving money or deterring future crimes, it's about revenge.

We, as a society, detest these criminals with every fiber of our beings, not only for the heinous act itself, but also because these wretched villains have completely wasted their lives. Also because they are destroying the fabric of the society that the rest of us work so hard to maintain

The question that should be asked is whether revenge is a legitimate reason for having a death penalty. My major problem with the death penalty as it stands is, if it is an acceptable form of punishment, then it should televised. In this manner, society can see its revenge enacted and also see how absolutely gruesome capital punishment is.

 CAMPUS BLOOD DRIVE SUCCESS DUE TO COMMUNITY, STUDENT EFFORTS

Editor, The Spring 1997 American Red Cross Blood Drive was on campus Feb. 17-21. During that time, we collected 652 units. The University of Kansas had their Blood Drive a week ago and collected 349 units So congratulations, Wildcats, we retain the trophy once again!

While we are pleased to retain the trophy, our real purpose is to collect as much blood as possible to ensure a constant supply for the people needing blood products in our region.

For that reason, we will be working hard again in the fall to collect an even higher number of units on our campus.

Special thanks for the spring drive go to Stefanie Huff, Mark Leiker, Alex DeBaun, Heidi Eichman and Hilary Ellyson, who coordinated large portions of the effort. I am grateful to Dick Edwards Ford, which donated the key tags for each donor; the K-State Student Union: KSU Facilities: Kiwanis Club; area businesses who advertised on their marquees; area churches who printed our reminder in their bulletins; and the following student organizations who helped organize and advertise the Bloodmobile: Alpha Epsilon Delta, Army ROTC, Association of Residence Halls, Delta Tau Delta, Golden Key, Pre-Nursing Club, Pre-Physical Therapy Club and Pre-Vet Club.

Of course, the event would not have been successful without the help of community and student volunteer workers and the all-important donors. The American Red Cross and all who will receive the gift of life you donated will

 BIRDHOUSE CONCERTS FOCUS ON MUSIC, NOT ALCOHOL

We were pleased to see the Collegian review of the BirdHouse second anniversary concert with the Sherpas. This show, as with many of our others, was close to a sellout. We are happy that the word seems to be getting out and that there exists a segment of the population in Manhattan that wants to hear excellent acoustic music. We would like to emphatically correct a statement in the lead, however. We did treat the audience to cake, and yes, the icing was electric blue. We did not treat anyone to alcohol, nor were there any alcohol-related incidents that we know of. By any standard, our audience is respectful of the music we present.

There is a cash bar at our concerts that is run by a professional catering service. Another caterer serves coffee and tea. We feel that having these services enhances the evening for some of our

We founded BirdHouse specifically to be an alternative to the bar scene. We feature world-class songwriters and acoustic musicians in an intimate setting. Symposium focuses on alternative media

The newspaper business is moving from Kedzie Hall to Union 212 today, Thursday and Friday for a symposium sponsored by the K-State chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists.

"Against the Mainstream: An Alternative Media Symposium" is designed to spotlight more of the news media other than the big-name newspapers and TV news.

"We tried to have a diverse program and one K-State could relate to," said Douglass Daniel, SPJ adviser and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications. Each presentation, open to the entire University, is expected to last between one and 1-1/2 hours. This includes the speech and a session following for questions and answers. At 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, Roz Hutchinson, writer for the Wichita Business Journal, will begin the symposium with "The Business of Business News." Bruce Rodgers from Pitch Weekly in Kansas City, Mo., will speak at 10:45 a.m. Thursday about publishing a big-city weekly. The symposium will conclude at 2:30 Friday afternoon with Ray Mabion II, a staff writer for the Kansas City Call, presenting "A Black Voice in Community Journalism."

Of all the student and professional SPJ chapters nationwide, K-State was one of 10 to receive a grant from the national SPJ to assist with expenses, Daniel said.

Construction begins on Konza overlook

REBECCA AISTRUP

A scenic overlook containing information about the Konza Prairie is being developed three miles south of Manhattan on Kansas Highway 177.

The area will contain a pavilion and two courtyard areas with benches, each with a bronze plaque describing the Konza Prairie.

The overlook was incorporated in the Kansas Department of Transportation's transformation of K-177 into a four-lane

KDOT looked at three or four different sites for the scenic overlook on the Konza property and then met with representatives of the Nature Conservancy and K-State's Division of Biology to make a final decision on a site

"The purpose of this project is educational, specifically to learn about the history of the Dewey Ranch and the formation of the Flint Hills," Leon Brown, landscape architect with Schwab-Eaton,

A walking trail leading into the tall grasses of the prairie is being developed. This trail will also contain a plaque.

"In the future they might possibly link the walking trails that already exist in the grasses with the trail that leads to the shelter," Brown said.

Shilling Construction is the general contractor and is in charge of the asphalt work on the drive off of the highway leading up to the site. Oepinger-Lloyd Construction of Clay Center will do the building work on the site.

The building consists of concrete floors, a metal roof and tubular steel sun shades over part of the building.

The sides of the building are made of concrete walls and sheathed with lime-

The color scheme of brick red and forest green adds to the structure and works well with the limestone, Brown

The estimated cost for the building structure is $160,000, Dennis Burke, contract administrator for Shilling Construction, said.

This is a very impressive structure. The thought process in the architectural design was more than just a cracker-box design," said Steve West, project estimator and project manager with Oepinger-Lloyd Construction.

'The idea of the design was to have something that would need very little maintenance upkeep.'

Construction on the project is now

"The project will be done sometime in August if everything goes well,"

Burke said.

In addition to all the shows and rides, there will be a lot of educational exhibits at the fair.

The fair has a program, "Kansas' Largest Classroom," where teachers can bring their students and have them visit various exhibits.

"They come here to learn. They don't go to the midway," Gottschalk, general manager, said.

A new exhibit this year will feature the Brown v. Topeka Board of Education case. It will be an 18-foot-long standing exhibit on the court case that initiated the end of segregation in schools. Fair attendees can walk along both sides of the display to learn about

China rejects allegations of influence buying

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - China is issuing categorical denials of allegations that top Chinese officials have waged a twoyear campaign to buy influence with U.S. officials.

The denials were issued after a twohour meeting Monday between Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Chinese Foreign Minister Qian

Albright told Qian she had serious concerns about the allegations, but Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Shen Guofang said Beijing has never been engaged in political donations in the United States.

"It did not take part in the past and will not take part in the future," Shen He contended that the information in the American press is mostly inaccurate about alleged Chinese campaign contri-

A recent report that appeared in the Washington Post Friday said the purported scheme had the backing of top Chinese officials.

Qian was continuing his visit Tuesday with meetings at the Pentagon. Defense Secretary William Cohen said the two military chiefs would discuss what the Clinton administration has described as increasing and troubling but not illegal - sales of conventional weapons to Iran by China.

"I obviously will discuss a variety of issues which will have an impact upon our military relationship, including the sales of weapons to countries such as Iran," Cohen said without elaboration. Qian will meet with President

Clinton today. During their two-hour meeting, Albright and Qian agreed on procedures for U.S. warships to make port calls in Hong Kong after the British colony reverts to Chinese control on July 1.

House OKs 1-year extension for wheat

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - A one-year extension of a land conservation program for winter wheat regions passed the House on Tuesday, but Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman said it could compound wheat supply problems.

Glickman said in a letter to House sponsors that extension of the Conservation Reserve Program would idle millions of acres just as this year's wheat crop is suffering from freezes and floods around the country.

The extension "precludes millions of acres of farmland from returning to production next year to help rebuild this country's very low wheat stocks," Glickman said.

But the House approved the legislation, 325-90. It affects wheat, barley and oats producers in states where crops are planted in the fall, including Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado and Farmers would be able to keep acreage idle under the Conservation Reserve Program for another year, even if the acreage was later rejected by the Agriculture Department. This would give farmers time to prepare the ground, now covered with trees or grass, for crop planting in fall 1998.

If they are not notified about their CRP acres until summer, some farmers fear losing both a crop and a government payment this year.

'Most of these producers cannot and will not gamble on waiting for the USDA to make a decision," said House Agriculture Committee Chairman Bob Smith, R-Ore.

Contracts on 22 million acres of CRP land expire in September, and farmers have offered 26 million for new 10-year contracts.

Glickman outlined several options for farmers, including some continued CRP payments even if the land is prepared for cultivation and a promise that

Judge lessens former PTL official's repayment

WICHITA - A federal judge said he would follow an appeals court ruling that slashed by 70 percent the restitution owed by former church builder Roe Messner on his bankruptcy fraud conviction.

U.S. District Judge Wesley Brown said Monday he would reduce Messner's restitution from $72,500 to $20,000.

A three-judge panel of the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver upheld Messner's conviction and sentencing in February, but threw out the restitution ordered on three counts. The panel ruled creditors suffered no loss on those counts, but upheld restitution ordered on two other counts.

Brown scheduled a hearing for Monday to formalize the reduction.

Messner is the second husband of Tammy Faye Messner, the ex-wife of PTL leader Jim Bakker, who has served prison time for defrauding followers of millions of dollars.

Messner, 61, a former Andover resident, lives in Rancho Mirage, Calif., with his wife. He was convicted in November 1995 of concealing about $400,000 in assets from creditors and of making false statements. In addition to the restitution, he was sentenced to two years and three months in prison without parole

Messner has been free on appeal since his sentencing. At Monday's hearing, Brown likely will either set a date or begin the process of setting a date for Messner to begin his prison term, said Chris Watney, a spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office.

Messner, who built the Heritage USA religious theme park for Bakker, filed for personal and corporate bankruptcy in 1990 after Bakker's religious empire began to collapse. Messner was the former president of Commercial Builders of Kansas Inc. and was Jim Bakker's best friend

Bakker spent five years in prison on wire and mail fraud convictions for bilking followers out of millions of dollars.

chimpanzees from AIDS virus

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - An experimental AIDS vaccine made from HIV genes has protected chimpanzees for more than a year, raising doctors' hopes the approach will work in humans.

Two chimps got the vaccine and then a stiff dose of HIV - 250 times the amount needed for infection.

It's the first time that a so-called DNA vaccine has squared off against HIV in chimps.

"We're encouraged but cautious," said David B. Weiner, senior author of the study

Preliminary tests in people have begun already to look for side effects and see how the vaccine affects the body's defenses against disease. No results are available yet. Weiner is an associate professor of pathology and laboratory medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. He reported the work in the May issue of the journal Nature Medicine with colleagues there and elsewhere, including Apollon Inc. of Malvern, Pa.

Experimental vaccine protects The work is another step toward developing new concepts for vaccines, said Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. "But the success with regard to protection is not any more or less than several other concepts that we've seen in the chimp." Harold McClure, who studies AIDS at the Yerkes Regional Primate Research Center at Emory University in Atlanta, called the results very promising. He said it will be important to follow the chimps longer to see if an HIV infection emerges, which the researchers are doing. So far there is no sign of infection at 53 weeks after the HIV dose, Weiner said.

Each chimp got two versions of the vaccine, made from certain altered HIV genes. The animals got six injections over 15 weeks, then two boosters.

Scientists gave so many shots because they were studying the immune system response. If the vaccine proves useful in people it probably won't Cult leader David Koresh and about 80 follówers died.

O'Rourke said McLaren is not David Koresh and does not have a death wish, but that it is clear McLaren and his wife are willing to die for their beliefs.

On his World Wide Web site, McLaren warned that a declaration of war will be issued if state and federal agents threaten the Republic of Texas' sovereignty. He warned that the clash could "set off the liberation of America from New World Order tyranny."

O'Rourke contacted fellow Houston lawyer Dick DeGuerin, who was Koresh's attorney, to become co-counsel. But DeGuerin suggested Tuesday that the best way to end the standoff would be for O'Rourke to convince McLaren that he must surrender and fight his battles in court.

"If McLaren has a different agenda, if he wants to be a martyr, he can do that real easy," DeGuerin said.

"Have a standoff, start shooting and the government will accommodate him and probably win. I'd hate to see it come to that," he said.

DeGuerin called the arrival of the armored carriers provocative.

On human rights issues in general, Shen said China is ready for a dialogue but hopes that the United States will not seek a confrontation.

Burns said, "There is practically no political opposition left in China." Most dissidents, he said, have been arrested. Shen also sought to soften U.S. com-

NCAA dollars from state facing midnight deadline

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — It's going to cost a lot of money — about $50 million — if Indianapolis is going to lure the NCAA headquarters away from its longtime home in the Kansas City, Kan., area.

About $20 million is supposed to come from the state, but that money is not guaranteed while the governor and state law-makers remain deadlocked over a budget and the session's end was scheduled for midnight Tuesday.

Gov. Frank O'Bannon said Monday that luring the NCAA headquarters to Indianapolis is not one of his top priorities and would merely be icing on the cake should it happen.

Until a budget is reached, the governor said, he will not even consider the $20-million incentive package.

"There are basic things we have to do, and I think we can get them done by tomorrow," O'Bannon said when asked about the NCAA. "That (the NCAA funding) has to come after the basic things are done."

The NCAA announced early this month it had narrowed its choices for a new head-quarters to Indianapolis and its current home in Overland Park. No decision is expected before late May or early June.

Local organizers have said that $25 million of Indianapolis' total package would come from private and philanthropic sources, $20 million from the state and $5 million in non-cash incentives from the city.

Republican legislative leaders said early in the year that they saw no reason the state could not come up with the money.

They also said it would be up to the Democratic O'Bannon administration to come forward and push the proposal as an economic development tool — much the way it would a new auto plant.

Now, they say, O'Bannon is playing polities by withholding NCAA money until a budget deal is done that includes all of his tax-cut and spending proposals.

"We haven't heard anything from the governor," said Sen. Morris Mills, an Indianapolis Republican and a key budget

"This is just speculation on my part, but I kinda suspect that there may be other options," said Rep. William Crawford, an Indianapolis Democrat who has raised questions about the package since it was unveiled.

Junior transfer signs with K-State

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

K-State head basketball coach Tom Asbury announced the signing of Ty Sims, a 6'5" power forward from North Dakota State College of Science Tuesday.

Sims, a native of Minneapolis, Minn., was a two-time NDSCS MVP, team captain and leading scorer. He averaged 18 points per game as a freshman and 14 points and eight boards last year as a sophomore.

He was also honored twice as a firstteam all-state and all-region selection. Sims is a two-time NJCAA all-American honorable mention.

In high school he was all-city and allconference twice and was among the finalists for Mr. Basketball in Minnesota as a

Asbury looks for Sims, at 6'5" and 220 pounds, to shoulder much of the inside load in the physical Big 12 Conference in the "Ty is going to be a great addition to our program," Asbury said. "He has been an inside player for his entire career, but he can step out and shoot as well. He will add strength and bulk inside at the power forward position. With the big bodies in the Big 12, he will be welcomed in addition to our lineup."

Greg Stemen, head coach at NDSCS, looks for Sims to feel right at home with the pounding the Big 12 has to offer.

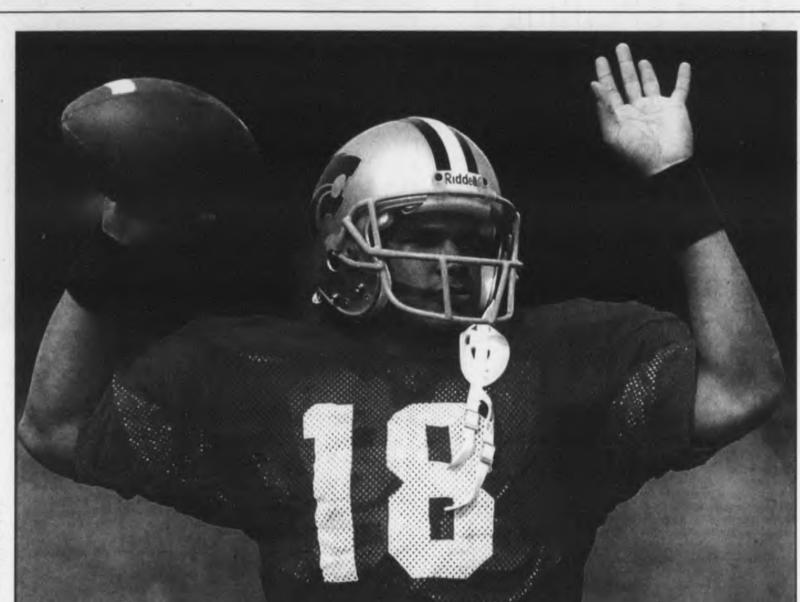

"When Ty gets himself in great physical condition, he will be a solid contributor at Kansas State," Stemen said. "I think he is already physically capable of handling the Big 12. He can absorb contact and finish. He just needs to tone himself a little. He handles physical play real well. He is the type of player who will take advantage of his physical nature."

NDSCS was 32-20 in the two seasons Sims played (17-8 as a freshman and 15-12 last year).

"He was the type of player who displayed leadership by example," Stemen said. "He was our team MVP twice and was elected team captain both years, even as a freshman. He shows leadership by effort and by the way he handles criticism and compliments. He is a level-headed kid whose degree and future are important to him."

QB competition

Search for K-State's next quarterback a tight race

Adam Helm, Jonathan Beasley, Michael Bishop or Casey Vidrickson. Who

That question still abounds in the mind of K-State head football coach Bill Snyder as he prepares for the annual spring game at 1 p.m. Saturday at Wagner Field

"In all reality I think it's still wide open," Snyder said. "No one has done anything to jump up and say 'Hey, I'm the guy.' I'd like someone to step and make some headway, but they've got a lot of work to do."

And that's exactly what those quarterbacks have been doing — work.

Since spring practices have started, they have worked earnestly to learn the scheme of the offense and try to figure out the routes in the play book.

Beasley, who saw action in eight games last year as a true freshman, looked as if he would be the front-runner for the position, but the resurgence of Helm has made the quarterback position one of the most interesting on the team.

"It's become very competitive at the quarterback spot," Snyder said. "They've certainly been very competitive about it."

Beasley was listed as No. I when spring practices started. Last season, Beasley completed K-State's longest pass of the regular season when he connected with Troy Hackney for a 57-yard touchdown play in a win against Indiana

He also was third on the team in rushing last season with 91 yards. Beasley said seeing action in many games last year certainly has helped his confidence.

"That had definitely helped," Beasley said. "It forced me to get into that toughness mode again. I know the play book a little better and can get the team into the right plays and execute the routes."

Beasley said he was challenged this spring by the difficulty of trying to think

"I'm just trying to get better and better," he said. "It's very important to know what the receiver is going to do because the route may change. You and your wide receivers want to be able to think exactly alike."

HUTCHINSON — Leif Westerberg held on to the individual scoring lead Tuesday to help Oklahoma State claim the first Big 12 men's golf championship, played at the 6,593-yard, par-70 Prairie Dunes Country Club.

Westerberg's 76 in the final round, his first round over par, almost allowed Texas' Brad Elder to catch him. Westerberg finished with a score of 211. Elder placed second with 213, including a final-round 73.

The Cowboys ran away with the team title, though. Their 882 overall score was 10 shots ahead of second-place Texas. Four of five Oklahoma State players placed in the top 20. In addition to Westerberg, Edward Loar finished 12th, Brian Guetz 13th and Landry Mahan was in a six-way tie for 16th.

Texas' final-round best of 295 moved the Longhorns into second, with an overall score of 892. Iowa State fell to third place with 901, Kansas finished fourth with 902 and Oklahoma ended in fifth with 904.

CINCINNATI — Deion Sanders has returned to baseball a different player, one who has learned to accept his limitations on the diamond.

It shows in his swing and in his stats.

The Cincinnati Reds' leadoff hitter is having the best month of his major-league career. He leads the major leagues with 18 steals and leads his team in hitting at

When he left baseball two years ago to devote his time to the Dallas Cowboys, Sanders was an average leadoff hitter with a low on-base percentage. Since then, he has come to terms with his shortcomings.

"I just know myself now," Sanders said. "That's pretty much it. You learn your limitations. You learn what you can and cannot do. Once you're able to accept that, everything is fine out there.

"I've accepted quite a few things I know I cannot do.
I'm not a guy who's going to hit the ball out of the park.
I could if I changed my stance, but I wouldn't be hitting what I'm hitting."

The change has been so impressive that those around him are convinced it's not just a one-month fluke.

"Deion used to be an athlete playing baseball," shortstop Barry Larkin said. "Now he's matured. He knows what he can do, and he's accepted it."

Judge denies delay in hearing of man accused of killing 3

SALINA — Testimony began Tuesday at the preliminary hearing for a man accused of killing a Salina woman, her daughter and great-grandson last summer, after a judge denied a request for another delay.

Saline County District Judge Dan Boyer also rejected a motion to prohibit use of DNA evidence at the hearing for Alan E. White, 26, of Formosa.

One of White's attorneys, Jeffrey Moots, asked for the continuance or prohibition of use of the DNA evidence because he said he had received the evidence from the state only recently.

prosecution hasn't told the defense how the tests were done or provided samples to allow testing by an independent laboratory. "That's the key evidence by the state's own admission," Moots said.

Prosecutors said they turned the DNA report over to the defense as soon as it could.

In denying the defense motion, the judge said he had already granted an earlier delay, and that today's proceeding was only a hearing, not a trial.

White is charged with four counts of capital murder, rape and other offenses in the July 22 deaths of Dolores McKim, 80, of Salina; her daughter, Carol Abercrombie, 56, of Soddy-Daisy, Tenn.; and McKim's great-grandson Christopher Abercrombie, 5, of Greenville, N.C. All were found dead in McKim's Salina home. If convicted. White could face the death penalty. White stood when witness Tanya

Mayfield was asked to identify him, and smiled at her.

She said that White lived with her in November and December 1995, in an apartment about 300 feet from where McKim's car was found after the homicides.

A police officer testified that White's fingerprints were not found in Another police officer described finding the bodies in the McKim home. He said the women were on the floor in separate rooms, in pools of blood, and the boy was on a bed, also in a pool of blood.

In March, the judge approved a request to compare White's handwriting to a hand-written note that appears to say "want to kill."

The note was found July 28 in a pile of trash a few miles from the scene of the crime. It said:

"Young & old on the hill. Next could be you. I like your house. Want to kill."

The last phrase was written in a nearly indecipherable scrawl.

White was arrested in November in a Boston homeless shelter after he was featured on Fox Network's "America's Most Wanted" program.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Perhaps it's about time to retire that age-old question of what is art and what

The dividing line between the two seems fuzzy enough in the Kansas Artist Craftsmen Association Member's Exhibition, to be at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art until June 22. The exhibition features a number of member artists from student, professorial and practicing artist backgrounds. The show encompasses diverse media, be it metalweaving, smithing, ceramics or glass. It is also the first three-dimensional show for the Beach and another fine one committed to Kansas artists.

Local artists are well-represented, if not dominant, in the show. Anna Calluori Holcombe, head of the Department of Art, shows two of her earthy, witty "Still Lifebox" pieces from 1996, both low-fire stoneware boxes crowned by quasi-two-dimensional coffee cups and pitchers.

Margaret Buie, who is doing wonderful things as art director at the Columbian Gallery in Wamego, is represented with two works. "Large Eggshell Bowl," pewter (1980), the larger of the two, assumes the form of half an eggshell with its free-form, crumbling rim.

Lawrence artist Ron Hinton's wall-hung "Quiet Descent," photoetched bronze (1995), brings architectural form to the show with this jagged, angular construction with some fine line details evoking Piet Mondrian. Hinton's freestanding "Counterpoint," photoetched bronze and brass (1992), is similar in form, but with details of a foreign map subtly imprinted.

Kansas wit surfaces again in the jewelry pieces of Pittsburg artist Marjorie Schick. Her "Bracelet," papier mache (1994), and "Necklace," papier mache and rubber (1996), appear as threedimensional David Hockney paintings twisted geometric form in splashy primary and secondary colors. This oversized art might be wearable, but could you really get away with it in Pittsburg? Perhaps Manhattan ...

The Craftsmen Association was formed in Kansas in 1965 with a mission to raise awareness about crafts and to bring some prestige to the state of Kansas, which has a fine crafts movement that most certainly grew from its farm roots.

On a farm, ingenuity is a prized possession as one fixes machinery, buildings and fences with tools and gadgets that don't exist in retail circles. But is there a connection between the farm approach to craftsmanship and the artistic craftsman movement?

"A lot of it is people working on the farms and discovering they have some artistic talent," Elliott Pujol said.

Pujol is a professor of art at K-State and past president of the Craftsmen Association. Pujol's delicate, wiry 'Prairie Fire," bronze and gold (1996), is included in the show

Although none of the work in the show really approaches that of folk art, just the same it is sincere work with some artistic liberties.

"There's a certain amount of honesty to the work," Pujol said.

"I do make a lot of work. There's nothing to do in Kansas. We work in isolation. A lot of craftspersons are reclu-And similar to the waste-not, want-

DIETING FAD

Researchers express concern on popular lose-gain dieting

CHRISTA K. CAREY

-yo dieting has drawn the attention of researchers concerned about safety. Studies by the American Heart Association show that people who repeatedly lose and gain weight have a higher overall death rate and a greater risk for both heart disease and cancer.

According to AHA, other studies have not reported such findings, and additional research is needed.

AHA recommends individuals try to maintain an ideal weight for health reasons.

"Yo-yo diets are really defined as a short-term solution to a long-term problem. People need to lose weight for an event such as spring break or a wedding. It is not a long-term lifestyle change," Dr. Larry Moeller, a staff physician at Lafene Health Center, said.

Yo-yo dieting has always been popular, especially with college students who are concerned with the freshman 15. The freshman 15 refers to the 15 pounds that freshmen typically gain in their first year at college. They often try to lose pounds by drastically reducing calories, not by increasing exercise. Therefore, once the diet ends, the weight returns.

"People who diet lose half fat and half muscle. However, people who decrease calories and increase exercise lose more fat and less muscle," said Mary Higgins, chief clinical dietitian at Mercy Health Center. Most people who diet do so to lose fat and not muscle, so yo-yo dieting is often ineffective. "A safe rate for weight loss is one to two pounds per week. A faster rate of weight loss is usually due to loss of muscle and water, which can be detrimental to your health," Higgins said. A person's metabolism is also altered when dieting becomes a habit. The metabolism goes down because fat is less active than muscle. This makes it harder to lose weight or to keep it off.

"At the end of a diet, people may weigh the same, but unfortunately, they will have a higher percentage of body fat," Higgins said.

The most favorable weight for an individual is determined by a variety of factors, such as existing health problems, percentage and location of body fat, heredity and realistic weight maintenance goals. A healthy weight is one that can be realistically maintained for life.

Individuals who repeatedly fail at weight loss should focus on the prevention of weight gain as an achievable

The solution might be simple. If too much food is being consumed, simply reduce the amount. By not concentrating solely on calories and fat content, individuals begin to develop a diet for life. At the same time, weight is being lost.

Even if you don't know what the words mean, you'll know what's going on easily."

Besides the Express' three main performances, it will also do small skits Thursday during the lunch hour at the Union Courtyard.

"They are one of the most inventive groups that I have seen," Hedrick said. "They're extremely clever and imaginative."

Kansas ranks 10th in number of billboards

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - If you drive for an hour on most major Kansas highways, you'll probably see 46 billboards.

In fact, Kansas ranked 10th nationally last year in total number of billboards at 8,072, according to a new national report that blames flaws in the 1965 Highway Beautification Act for their proliferation.

"These billboards block scenic vistas, turning a beautiful country drive into a trip through the yellow pages," said Sen. James Jeffords, a Vermont Republican who has introduced reform legislation. "This billboard explosion has got to stop."

Scenic America, a non-profit group dedicated to preserving scenic beauty, found in a recent study that the number of billboards has risen by thousands nationally, that few billboards are removed even if they don't meet federal guidelines and that many are improperly located in rural areas because of a loophole

Indeed, Scenic America found there are now 450,000 billboards across the country, compared to 330,000 when the Highway Beautification Act was

"Thirty-two years after its passage, the act has become little more than a billboard protection program," according to the Scenic America report.

The Outdoor Advertising Association of America, however, contends that the law resulted in removal of 875,000 illegal billboards since 1965 and that the number of signs around the country has remained relatively level for

In addition, association spokeswoman Kippy Burns said a recent poll done for the group indicates that three out of four Americans find billboards useful when traveling.
"A billboard helps the traveler find what they're looking for, and it helps the small business get their customers," she said. "If you don't know that antique store is out there, you're going to drive right past it." Although thousands of illegal billboards have been removed, others erected in areas not considered industrial or commercial remain in Kansas and other states, according to Scenic America.

Scenic America found that 4,342 Kansas billboards do not adhere to standards of the Highway Beautification Act - they are considered non-conforming, not illegal outright - or 54 percent of the state's total. Yet in the last fiscal year, not one of those signs was taken down.

The study blames a part of the law that requires state and local governments to pay billboard operators just compensation when a billboard is removed. When federal funding for these payments ended in 1985, removal of non-conforming billboards dropped to a fraction of the total that exist. Kansas, like 36 other states, permits new billboard construction in unzoned, primarily rural areas. And in unzoned commercial areas, or those where there is at least one business, a legal loophole could also result in multiple billboard con-

Scenic America said it could not obtain a precise count from state officials of the Kansas billboards found in these unzoned areas. But given the rural nature of the state, it is likely that many of the 8,000 or so Kansas billboards are found in the country-

With a major transportation spending bill moving through Congress this year, billboard opponents are gearing up for reform.

Jeffords, whose home state of Vermont is one of four that permits no billboards at all, says his bill would increase the power of local governments to reduce billboards and toughen the Highway Beautification Act. "We must control and eliminate this visual pollution," Jeffords said.

The bill would place a freeze on construction of any new billboards along highways that get federal funding, requiring one to come down for every one that goes In addition, the bill would prohibit any new billboards in unzoned rural areas and end the practice of cutting trees to benefit billboards. There would also be a new 15-percent gross revenue tax imposed on billboards, with the proceeds going to help remove illegal signs around the country.

Burns said state and local governments already have the authority to impose many of the same restrictions and should be allowed to do so if they want.

Mangled axle makes dramatic debut in OKC bombing trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Prosecutors undraped their largest and most important piece of evidence in the trial earlier Tuesday: a mangled, 250-pound axle they say links Timothy McVeigh to the bomb-carrying truck.

The 7-foot-tall mass of jagged and twisted black metal, draped in a black cloth, was wheeled in front of the jury box on a red hand cart and then uncovered.

The explosion threw it 575 feet from the federal building, FBI agent James Elliott testified.

A vehicle identification number was stamped into the metal of the axle, which was found the day of the bombing. The truck's ignition key and fts blackened, damaged rear license plate, issued in Florida, were also discovered in the wreckage strewn across downtown Oklahoma City, Elliott said.

Ryder truck executive Clark Anderson said that on an FBI request hours after the attack, the axle number was easily traced by computer to a 20foot Ryder truck that had been rented on April 17, 1995 - two days before the bombing - from Elliott's Body Shop in Junction City.

The customer gave the name Bob Kling, which prosecutors say is an alias used by McVeigh. Prosecutors said they will call the body shop's owner to identify McVeigh as the man who rented the truck. Body shop employees provided the sketch later used to identify Prosecutors say McVeigh packed the truck with barrels of fertilizer and fuel oil and drove it up to the federal building, where it exploded.

The 29-year-old Gulf War veteran could get the death penalty if convicted of murder and conspiracy in the deadliest act of terror on U.S. soil.

Looking at still photographs from a security camera, Anderson said a vehicle shown parked outside the building on April 19, 1995, at 8:56 a.m. - six minutes before the bombing - was a 20-foot Ryder truck.

Those stills were not shown to the jury, and another witness is to be called to authenticate the photos.

Prosecutors contend McVeigh bombed the federal building out of general hatred for the U.S. government and to avenge the government's deadly raid on the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas.

Louis Hupp, an FBI fingerprint specialist, testified earlier Tuesday that anti-government writings were found in McVeigh's car after the bombing. He said the documents included a scathing attack on the government for the FBI's Waco raid exactly two years before the Oklahoma City attack.

The documents were in a thick, sealed envelope in McVeigh's 1977 Mercury Marquis.

Hupp said McVeigh's prints were on anti-government writings and on a crumpled business card from Paulsen's Military Supply in Wisconsin that bore a handwritten notation: "TNT at $5 a stick. Need more."

That card was found on the floor of the Oklahoma Highway Patrol car used to take McVeigh to jail after he was arrested on an unrelated gun charge about 75 minutes after the bombing.

By late fall 1986, K-State had one of the best admissions teams in the country, Wefald said.

Not only has Bosco been involved with administrative changes, but he has also watched the University grow in size and number of students

"We have nearly doubled in size. I hope that we continue our caring, responsive nature," Bosco said. "That seems to be our greatest strength. We continue to remain an institution of higher learning that generally cares about its faculty, students and staff. It makes it fun. That is the reason why I can't wait to get to work in the morn-

He didn't need much time.

"I'm different than most guys," Sanders said. "I expect the best, I really do. I expect the best out of myself no matter what the situation."

April has been the best month of his nine-year career. He hit safely in 19 of the Reds' first 23 games and led the majors in triples (four) and multihit games (13) in addition to steals.

The 18 steals are the most in April since Rickey Henderson had 20 in 1988. Sanders stole a career-high four bases in one game, tied his career high with four hits in another.

There is reason to think it could develop into more than a one-month fling. Sanders has gotten away from some of the bad habits that made him an easy out all too often.

When he walked away from the game two years ago, Sanders was an impatient hitter who swung at the first pitch resembling a strike. He played right into pitchers' hands.

"He used to go up there and swing, and in three pitches, whatever was going to be done was done," manager Ray Knight said. "It didn't take him many more than three pitches to get his business done."

That's changing. Sanders still doesn't take many walks - only seven in 23 games - but he's going deeper in counts and waiting for pitches he can handle. He's also going to the opposite field instead of trying to pull everything with his warning-track power. "His swing is still very aggressive and quick, but he's cut down on it a little bit so that instead of fouling balls off, he's now hitting them hard," Knight said. "He works at the plate."

By getting on base so much, he's able to use the thing that makes him special on a baseball field - his speed. At his current pace, Sanders would break Lou Brock's NL mark of 118 steals and challenge Henderson's major-league record of 130.

"That's not going to happen," Sanders said. "That record is going to be there for a long time. Just getting on base at that rate is unbelievable, man. Only a guy like Rickey could do that because he walks so much and he's just on base so much."

There's also a subtle factor at work in Sanders' transformation. He came back to Cincinnati because he likes the organization and feels comfortable in the community and supported in the clubhouse.

For instance, when the NL objected to Sanders trimming his uniform sleeves in tribute to Jackie Robinson, his teammates got behind him and decided to change theirs, too.

"It's a factor any time in baseball, when you know a team's fully behind you," he said. "If you're comfortable doing anything, it's going to translate into your life.

Two months after the last booster, the two chimps got the dose of HIV. Researchers found signs of a slight and temporary HIV infection six weeks later in one animal and eight weeks later in the other, but there was no further trace of infection after that.

In contrast, another chimp that didn't get the vaccine became infected within two weeks of getting the HIV dose and stayed infected.

Vaccines make the body's immune system build defenses against particular germs. Some vaccines use live but weakened germs; others use dead germs or germ parts. But DNA vaccines like the one in this study take a different

The idea is to inject genes from the germ. The genes enter a small percentage of body cells and temporarily make those cells manufacture germ proteins.

When the immune system sees those proteins, it reacts as if it were facing a real infection.

So it makes other proteins called antibodies that can attack the germ and stimulates killer blood cells that can wipe out infected cells.

Senate defeats late-term abortion bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - The Senate opened the legislative wrap-up session where it had concluded the regu lar session — debating abortion.

Senators wrangled for an hour Wednesday before defeating a bill that would have banned most late-term abortions.

"Any attempt to stop this is not going to be seen as a pro-life vote," said Sen. Laurie Bleeker R-Great Bend. Her motion to concur in the House version of:

bill toughening the state's abortion regulation failed on an 18-22 vote. "I don't anticipate any more (motions to con cur) at this point," she said later, "not unless some

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said she would probably call a committee meeting Thursday.

But Rep. Tim Carmody, R-Overland Park chairman of the House Judiciary Committee and : member of the abortion conference committee said he was not inclined to attend.

"I guess you could say we've come to the poin of whether we are going to do anything abou abortion or not," he said. "Almost everybody opposes third-trimester abortions, and if we can't even do that (ban them), I don't want to waste my time on it.'

The Senate had put the bill into the conference committee after a sometimes emotional debate at the end of the regular session on April 11.

The conference committee was scheduled to meet Tuesday, but House conferees failed to attend. saying there was no compromising on the issue.

That version was the focus of Senate debate Wednesday, and Oleen asked senators to reject it. "Your vote to turn down this bill would send

POWELL VISITS KANSAS CITY WITH VISION OF VOLUNTEERISM.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Retired Gen. Colin Powell, whose army is now troops of volunteers, wants to see kids cleaning them up again America Tuesday night with 1,500 Kansas Citians after recently leading the Presidents' Summit for America's Future in Philadelphia.

He said a single mission came out of Powell said he wants to see adults serving as mentors for young people teaching them right from wrong. And he wants teen-agers to stop watching afternoon talk shows and instead learn marketable skills in technology. The benefit he appeared at raised about $300,000 for Swope Parkway Health Center, which Powell, the Harlem-born son of Jamaican immigrants who pushed his sister and him to get an education, encouraged young blacks not to get discouraged.

• PULITZER PRIZE WINNER DIES.

CHICAGO - Mike Royko, a columnist who embodied the no-nonsense voice of Chicago's working class and delighted in exposing greed and absurdity at the highest levels, died Tuesday.

He was 64, and had undergone surgery last week for an aneurysm. Royko, a Pulitzer Prize winner, was syndicated to more than 600 newspapers nationwide

His words were a cornerstone of the daily newspaper, first in the now-defunct Chicago Daily News, later with the Chicago Sun-Times and since 1984 with the Tribune.

He gained stature as a critic of the late Mayor Richard J. Daley at a time when most prominent Chicagoans treated up the streets so they won't want to dirty

Royko joined the Daily News in 1959 and won the Pulitzer for commentary in 1972. He moved to the Sun-Times in 1978 when the Daily News folded, then to the rival Tribune in 1984, citing Rupert Murdoch's acquisition of the Sun-

Royko is survived by his wife, Judy, whom he married in 1986, a 9-year-old son, Sam, and 4-year-old daughter, Kate, as well as two sons from his first marriage, David and Robert, and four grandchildren. His first wife, childhood sweetheart Carol Duckman, died in 1979.

member, remembered Houdek's politeness. He recalled bringing Houdek and other fraternity members home to visit his family in Oklahoma.

"He addressed my parents as Mr. and Mrs. Davis. He just couldn't look at my dad and not see Mr. Davis. That's just the kind of guy he was. He was always polite and never wanted to offend anyone," Davis said.

"We joked with him about it, but he could take a joke better than anyone," Davis said.

The men of SAE honored Houdek by reciting their code of conduct, the poem "True Gentlemen." SAE member Alex Judd, senior in general management, said Houdek exemplified every word of the poem.

Houdek's mother expressed her gratitude to ROTC, SAE and K-State.

She said Houdek accomplished his dreams in ROTC.

"When he joined ROTC, it was wonderful to watch him," she said. "He was like a flower. He bloomed. "If there is a legacy I can leave with you guys, it's to be everything he wanted you to be," she said.

Houdek's desire for cadets to strive for their best was displayed last year when he helped David Traynham, sophomore in criminology, raise his physical training scores.

"Last year, I was a PT slug," Traynham said. "I was getting a 186 on a 300-point scale, which is barely pass-Traynham said Houdek pushed him harder than anyone else that year. His scores raised from a 186 to a 256.

"The only reason I got there is because Houdek would never give up on me," he said. "He thought it was his purpose to make sure everybody was the best they could be."

After thanking his friends for caring for her son, Houdek's mother asked for those with special memories of Houdek to write them down.

"If you have a memory of Tyler, send it to us," she said.

The ROTC plans to keep Houdek's memory alive by establishing a memorial fund in his honor and by naming its rifle range after him.

His funeral will be at 2 p.m. Thursday in Kansas City, Mo.

LEE HUDSON, senior in marketing and international business, fights back tears while saluting the colors in the final roll call of Tyler Houdek. The final roll call, held in front of Military Science Building Wednesday morning, was the last time Houdek will be called active in the ROTC program. The final roll began like all other roll calls, where the commander called off names of the ROTC roster, and the cadets answered. After "Houdek" was called out twice, a M-16 rifle with bayonette was pointed into the ground, boots placed in front of the rifle, and Houdek's beret placed on the butt of the rifle. The men then fell out after "Taps" was played.

Senate OKs Herman to be labor secretary

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - After four months of political roadblocks and questions about her professional conduct, Alexis Herman won Senate confirmation to be labor secretary Wednesday.

Republicans removed a hold on the nomination after President Clinton agreed to drop plans to issue an executive order telling federal agencies to consider awarding construction contracts to unionized companies.

President Clinton cheered the 85-13 Senate vote - and the removal of the obstacles that had blocked it.

"I want to thank the Senate for its strong show of support for Alexis Herman." Clinton said in a

Herman statement. "There was never any question that she was highly qualified to be secretary of labor."

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle. D-S.D., expressed the same view.

"We've known now for some time that the delay in confirming Ms. Herman had little to do with her qualifications," he said. "I am very pleased that at long last, Ms. Herman will have a chance to serve in her position."

The GOP and business groups claimed victory in the dispute about use of unionized workers for federal construction projects, but the White House said Clinton would send agencies a memo similar to the proposed executive order. "I didn't have a problem with Alexis Herman being secretary of labor," Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., who had placed the hold on Herman's nomination, said moments before Wednesday's vote. "My purpose was to make sure that the administration does not try to legislate by executive order."

Her confirmation makes the CIA directorship the last seat to be filled in Clinton's Cabinet. George Tenet has been nominated for the job. Clinton's first choice, Anthony Lake, withdrew from a contentious confirmation process.

After fending off questions about her professional conduct as head of the White House Office of Public Liaison, her nomination hearing had gone smoothly, and she was expected to quickly win confir-

But she was again frustrated after the administration promised labor unions that it would change federal contract guide-

A White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the presidential memorandum would have the same substantive effect as an executive order amending federal contract guidelines. The memo will encourage agencies to award contracts to unionized companies. But neither the executive order nor the memo would require that they do so, the official

But business groups characterized the agreement as a victory.

"This clearly is a decisive victory for the American taxpayers, for all construction workers and the American business community," said Bruce Josten, vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "It clearly shows the initial proposed draft from the White House was fatally

Word of a deal came just hours after Senate Democrats blocked action on Republican legislation in an effort to pressure the GOP into allowing a vote on Herman's nomination.

According to the April 28 issue of Newsweek,

I believe that at one point in every person's life, a calling is heard. For some, the inner voice pulls an individual toward the corporate sector, fueled by some intrinsic wish to succeed materially in the world. For others, a voice resounds the virtues of giving one's time and care to a cause, whether it be the church, education or another worthy sector where help is needed.

Problems arise, though, when a call is ignored in favor of something else. An educator, looking ahead to a lifetime of lower salaries, might opt for a more profitable career in the business world. Whatever the case, follow-

Yes, I believe that, within five years, this whole movement will fade away. The dollars that were funding programs would disappear, leaving institutions destitute. America moves from trend to trend rather quickly. Remember the "Just Say No" campaign? What about those "thousand points of light" Bush was so big on?

Just look at the term given the recent meeting - a summit. The highest level attainable, the peak. According to the definition, everything else is downhill.

I applaud Powell for his effort. I consider him a noble man and one of the true role models for not only children but adult Americans, too.

There are many variations and rules. It goes something like this: "Powercat!" Pow! (at this point smack the closest University of Kansas fan), or "I spy another Powercat" and "Oh look, there is another Powercat tag." Seriously, I have been noticing quite a little population explosion in the Powercat community. Where are they coming from? When I was younger there was no such thing as a Powercat. As we all know, that is an invention of the there on the wall was a proudly displayed Powercat. Instantly, she started to calm down. OK, maybe I am overanalyzing this small phenomena, but how exciting to go almost anywhere and see K-State support.

I love to see those local businesses get in the game with their support. The other day I was following a Budweiser truck that was decorated with a purple Powercat. All over town, there are businesses that require their employees to wear K-State supportive uniforms. You can't beat that. And how about those cement trucks with the spinning Powercats?

When you are on those longer road trips, it is so wonderful to see those Powercats that linger in the countryside. It seems like everywhere I go, barns are springing up with huge Powercats on them. And who could forget those signs on Interstate 70?

One of my favorite prairie Powercats resides on the Konza Prairie over those corrals near the highway. Just the other day, I added another one to my list - a Powercat weather vane.

Aside from the newest creations, there are still those old favorites that continue to put a smile on my face. Though they may be more than abundant, I still get excited when I see K-State license plates plastered on the front of vehicles. And don't forget Wet Willie. There is something so refreshing about water that comes from a purple bottle.

Among all of my Powercat safaris, I still have two Powercats that will forever rank at the top of my list. I have to admit, I am a little biased in the fact that both of these Powercats happen to reside on my property. One of them is the purple lit Powercat that hangs outside my apartment. I just can't resist a Powercat made from Christmas lights. I get a sense of pride every time I plug it in. My other favorite is on my

Deal to end separatist stand-off falls apart

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT DAVIS, Texas - The leader of the holed-up Texas secessionists broke off negotiations just when it seemed a surrender was in sight, a state official said Wednesday as the standoff in the mountains reached its fourth day.

"For those of you who are not from Texas, we have a little expression here: Sometimes a wheel falls off." Unfortunately, we've lost a wheel," said Mike Cox, spokesman for the Department of Public Safety.

Meanwhile, seven men carrying Republic of Texas membership cards and a variety of weapons were arrested as they apparently headed to Fort Davis to join the armed standoff. And a sheriff said he thought more members of the secessionist group were on their way.

An agreement with the Republic of Texas to end the siege had been drafted Tuesday night, but no final deal was signed, Cox said, refusing to provide details. As of midday Wednesday, nothing had been heard from Richard McLaren, leader of the group, Cox said.

"We don't like that. We don't want

Both hostages were released Monday in exchange for one of the jailed followers, a man arrested on weapons charges. The other follower, a woman, remained jailed on two contempt charges.

Cox said 13 people - all adults are believed to be holed up in McLaren's trailer, including at least two women. He said authorities are interested only in the six members who had been charged with kidnapping or other offenses in the hostage-taking.

"This is not the Alamo. This is not San Jacinto. And I'm not Davy Crockett," Cox said. "We're just a state law-enforcement agency trying to bring some folks to justice who need to get their day in court."

The seven men arrested Wednesday were picked up at a truck stop near Pecos, 70 miles from Fort Davis.

Officers searching their vehicle found five semiautomatic rifles, one shotgun, one .45-caliber pistol and several hunting knives, said Texas Ranger Sgt. Steve Foster. They also had ammunition, military rations, fatigues, medical supplies and marijuana.

Officers had a theft warrant for one of the seven men. No immediate charges were filed against the six others.

McVeigh attorney rips star witness as lying opportunist

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER - The woman who testified Timothy McVeigh confided his plans to blow up the Oklahoma City federal building was portrayed Wednesday as a drug-using liar who changed her story to save her own skin and make a buck.

In a persistent cross-examination of Lori Fortier, McVeigh attorney Stephen Jones sought not only to discredit one of the government's star witnesses but to suggest she shared blame in the deadliest terrorist attack on U.S. soil.

"If your testimony is accurate, all you had to do to prevent the deaths of 168 people was pick up a telephone?" Jones asked.

"Yes," Lori Fortier responded. "And you did not do that, did you?"

"No," she whispered. On Tuesday, she testified that six months before the bombing, McVeigh divulged plans to blow up the building to avenge the deadly government siege at Waco, Texas. She said he even used soup cans to diagram how he would stack barrels of explosives in the back of a truck for maximum destruction.

In his cross-examination, Jones suggested McVeigh was nothing more than a Walter Mitty - someone who merely fantasizes about grand deeds.

The 24-year-old wife of one of McVeigh's Army buddies acknowledged in a soft voice that after the bombing she lied to friends, family and the FBI by saying she didn't think McVeigh was

Through his questions, Jones suggested that Lori Fortier and her husband, Michael Fortier, changed their stories after they learned co-defendant Terry Nichols was arrested and they feared they could be next.

And only after she was promised immunity from prosecution did she start saying McVeigh divulged detailed plans for the bombing. Michael Fortier pleaded guilty to lesser charges in exchange for his testimony and could get up to 23

"Mrs. Fortier, would you agree with me that you either made false statements to the Federal Bureau of Investigation ... or you're making false statements to this jury of strangers?" Jones asked.

The question was quickly disallowed. At Jones' request, Lori Fortier read aloud a news release she and her husband issued shortly after McVeigh's arrest, in which Lori Fortier says that McVeigh was crucified by the media and that there's "no way that he was responsible for this crime.

"You were not distancing yourself from Mr. McVeigh, were you?" Jones asked.

"No," Lori Fortier said.

McVeigh, who could get the death penalty if convicted of murder and conspiracy in the April 19, 1995, bombing, stared intently at Lori Fortier, leaning back in his chair with his hands folded in

Much of the attack on Lori Fortier focused on her acknowledged drug use.

She said she smoked pot and used methamphetamines, or speed, since she was a teenager, with her drug use accelerating in the weeks before the bombing.

She admitted taking speed in the days prior to some of the most important dates of her testimony, including the days she says McVeigh revealed his bombing plans in the living room of the Fortiers' Kingman, Ariz., trailer.

During a break, Nichols' attorney, Michael Tigar, held a news conference to belittle Lori Fortier's testimony. He is not bound by the judge's gag order.

Yet Tigar also held up that same testimony as exonerating his client. Lori Fortier had recalled McVeigh's statements that Nichols didn't want to be involved in the bombing.

Privately, Michael Fortier was telling friends and family that he thought he could make some money by selling his story, according to FBI wiretaps of the mobile home that were read into the record by Jones.

"Did you talk to Michael privately about making a cool mill off this case?" Jones asked.

"No," said Lori Fortier. She added, "I never had an intention of selling my Public defender Jeffrey Moots argued that the defense was not given the opportunity to challenge the DNA results. None of the other evidence presented during the preliminary hearing linked White to the killings, Moots said.

The DNA report was admitted as evidence, but the only time it was mentioned during the hearing was when McKenna said in her final arguments that White's sperm was found in Carol Abercrombie's body. Forensic pathologists had testified Tuesday that Carol Abercrombie was raped.

KBI Special Agent Ron Hagen testified Wednesday that pieces of paper, one with a picture of White's parents and another with a list of ham radio operators, including Alan White and his father, Larry White, were found in the McKim home.

The forensic pathologist said the killer appeared to have used a tool similar to a roofing hammer to beat his victims, Hagen testified.

White turned over to authorities two roofing hammers, but no incriminating evidence was found on the tools, Hagen

Hagen also testified that Abercrombie's body was found in an unnatural position, with her hands above her head and her legs spread, and he said he believed the killer placed her body in the position after death.

Moots argued there was no evidence the rape took place while Carol Abercrombie was alive and that a rape count should be dropped.

But Boyer rejected that argument, ordering White to be tried on all 12 counts against him, including four counts of capital murder. The fourth murder charge was filed because of the

On Tuesday, witness Tanya Mayfield testified that White lived with her in November and December 1995 in an apartment near where McKim's car was found after the homicides.

Mayfield said she did not see White on July 21 or 22.

A police officer testified that White's fingerprints were not found in the car. He said contents of two purses had been emptied onto the floor of the car, and that the items included belongings of McKim and her daughter.

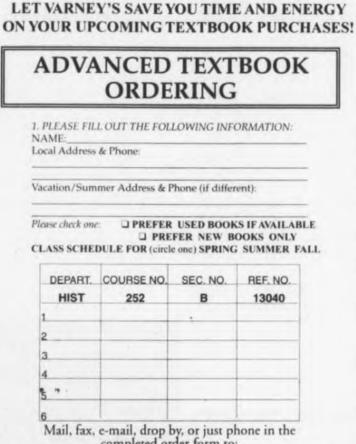

White's parents, JoEllen and Larry White, attended the hearing. JoEllen White started to cry as her son, wearing chains on his legs, was led into Wednesday's hearing.

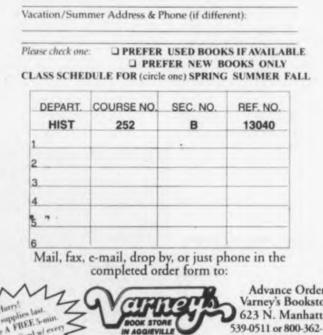

About a dozen of the victims' family members attended the hearing, including Carol Abercrombie's husband, Everett Abercrombie.

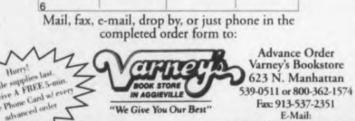

"We just want justice done," he said after White was ordered to stand trial.

White was arrested in November in a Boston homeless shelter after he was featured on Fox Network's "America's Most Wanted" program.

trip to the mailbox might offer the possibility of a letter from an old friend, a winning sweepstakes guarantee or the ever-so-popular junk-mail.

But for the average student, the mail carrier seems to bring only more bills and credit-card applications.

The natural tendency might be to trash the Visa applications and stash the bills under the coffee pot until later. According to the credit reporting agencies, however, this is the last thing students should do.

A personal credit history is important because it will be the basis for establishing larger credit needs later on, according to Gale Thierolf of the Credit Bureau of Manhattan. "You need be aware that after graduation your credit needs will probably increase," Thierolf said. "The pattern you set in the beginning will determine your eligibility later on." Establishing good credit consists of several things, she said. They are keeping up with all of your bills, managing your credit cards and avoiding the temptation to charge now, pay later.

Overspending on credit cards is one of the bigger problems that the local credit bureaus have to deal with.

"You always have the temptation to charge up a very large monthly bill without fully realizing you will have to pay for it later," she said. "Two credit cards for students is probably enough. They can help establish a good credit history, but it's difficult to manage more than that."

It is common for students to be targeted by large credit card companies.

"Many students receive these prescreened credit card applications," Thierolf said. "Actually though, they are assuming that the parents will pay if the student can't. That's why you see such high limits on many applications you get in the mail. It might be wise to avoid these in some situations, because if you don't have a job it's STORY BY STEVE WARE . ILLUSTRATION BY MATT HAWKINS very difficult to pay for them."

Monthly bills is the other area that students should be aware of.

Paying late can affect your credit history, Thierolf said.

"If you forget to pay a bill, contact that agency and let them know when you are sending it," she said. "If it's less than 10 days late there will probably not be a problem. Once it goes to the collection department, usually after 30 days, it might show up on your credit record."

Starting and maintaining a good credit history might be difficult for some, but it is essential when applying for credit after graduation.

"Creditors look at how long you've lived at an address, how long you've worked at your job and your pattern of payment," she said. "When you relocate after graduation your credit needs will probably increase, and these might not look so good. Having a credit history that looks good will be very helpful then," she said.

For those who find themselves with credit problems early, there is still help for their credit histories.

"Your credit report is only kept for seven years in most cases," Thierolf said. "If you mess up things early, you can still establish good credit later on. Start a good pattern and the trend will usually contin-

Credit counseling is also available to help sort out existing credit problems. Consumer Credit Counseling Services offers educational workshops and personal credit counseling for a small one-time fee for those with a debt problem.

"We help to teach students some management skills and about living within their income," Betty Messman, credit counselor, said. "We can also help students get out from under their debt load with our debt-management program."

Personal credit reports can be obtained through local credit bureaus.

New Helmet release leaves no bitter 'Aftertaste'

After three years of silence, New York's Helmet returns with its best work since 1992's "Meantime" album.

"Aftertaste" is far better than their last one, "Betty."

Helmet is the tightest band ever, and it really shows on "Aftertaste." It was recorded as a trio, since the band gave guitarist Rob Echeverria the boot last year. You wouldn't know it by listening, though. They have since enlisted Chris Traynor of Orange 9mm to restore the band to its full, live power.

"Aftertaste" builds slowly from almost nothing to classic Helmet within seconds with the first song, "Pure." That's a fitting title, since the song is nothing but pure Helmet through and through

It has their trademark choppy riffs and incredibly complex drum parts.

It blends straight into the second track, titled "Renovation," that features vocalist and guitarist Page Hamilton's vocals mixed low with the guitars, overpowering his voice. There's some really cool dissonant guitar notes on every few beats.

Hamilton's vocals are brought back up for "Exactly What You Wanted," and Hamilton sounds really angry about something. His voice is incredibly agitated and edgy, but I love it. It's perfect for this song. The cool tradeoffs between Hamilton and bassist Henry Bogdan on this one show off their incredible musical tal-

And it sounds cool, too. The somewhat rough production courtesy of Barkmarket's Dave Sardy is showcased wonderfully on one small part of "Like I Care." After the intro part with just drums and bass, you hear Hamilton's amplifier buzzing and then his guitar kicks into high gear. It knocks you flat.

I love the drum beats that drummer John Stanier kicks out on "Driving Nowhere." They have almost a hip-hop feel to

"Birth Defect" is a welcome return to the old school Helmet sound. It's a fast, brutal, almost hardcore song that sounds like stuff they did back in 1990.

They explore their off tempo days of yore with "Broadcast." With its lurching, plodding tempo, it's sure to throw you off your rocker. "It's Easy" is mixed weirdly, much like an old Ramones record, with the rhythm guitar and vocals in the left speaker and bass and drums in the right one.

It sounds especially cool, because for the first verse all you hear is Hamilton and a guitar out of just the left speaker, then everything else kicks in on the right. Ah, you gotta love stereo. Helmet shows why they are the tightest band ever on "Diet Aftertaste." Hamilton and company stop on a dime numerous times during the song, which is just phenomenal sounding.

"Harmless" sounds a bit like an old New York hardcore song. I'd love to see it performed live, because the crowd would be going absolutely nuts.

Hamilton sounds like he's been munching on broken glass and downing it all with Drano on "Insatiable." When he screams "It's never easy being ignored when you're worshiped and adored," it sounds like he's ready

Kansas Attorney General Consumer Protection Division Hot line 1-800-432-2310 ost problems with landlords can be avoided if tenants know their rights, said Cornell Mayfield, head of human resources in Manhattan City Hall.

Though a minority of Manhattan land owners might give the rest a bad name, 95 percent of Manhattan land owners are nice, competent people to whom tenants can talk, he said.

"Five percent are just plain bad," he said. "All they're interested in is the money. About the tenants, they could give a crap."

Todd O'Donnell, director of consumer and tenant affairs for K-State, said there shouldn't be any reason for the bad land owners to stay in business, but they do. If anyone wanting to rent a home in Manhattan would do what's necessary, they wouldn't be able to compete with the other 95 percent, he said.

Both Mayfield and O'Donnell said they get swamped with calls from tenants in the spring, complaining about lease agreements gone bad. They said they would much rather have tenants take steps on their own to prevent the problems.

"It all depends on how cautious the tenants are from the start," O'Donnell said.

Mayfield said landlords have the option of joining the Landlord's Association, but there's no obligation to join

Shirley Plumlee, the association's treasurer, said it now has 90 members, most of whom own less than 100 housing units. She'd like to be able to help tenants directly, but that's not what the association is for, she

"We're an educational organization, a resource for land owners," Plumlee said. "We keep landlords informed about their rights and responsibilities, and changes in laws."

O'Donnell said construction of new housing, such as the University Commons, might drive the rent in Manhattan down, but it'll take a while.

"Within a year, some of these landlords will have to lower their prices," he said. "Otherwise, people will just go someplace else."

Mayfield said a lot of new tenants don't even think about what needs to be done before they run into trouble

"I know when I was younger, I didn't think about it," he said.

"People deserve a safe, decent, sanitary place to live in, and they might not have a landlord like the one I had."

Mayfield said he hopes tenants will learn what their options are before they call on him to solve their prob-

Understanding landlords can help solidify relations

Good tenant-landlord relationships are very possible, provided both understand each other, Todd O'Donnell, director of consumer and tenant affairs for K-State, said.

"A landlord should be someone you can talk to, that values communication with tenants," he said. "Usually, they're as good as the tenants."

O'Donnell, who has compiled "Your Guide to Housing," a free pamphlet available in the Office of Student Activities and Services, explained step by step what prospective tenants should do to avoid trouble.

"Let's say you find an apartment you like. Take down the address, then call Code," he said, referring to the Building Code Inspection Office of Manhattan.

"They can look through their microfiche and tell you if there's been any complaints with that building. They can tell you if it's structurally sound, or if it has any other problems, though they might have to do some research," O'Donnell said.

Chuck Tannehill, assistant director of technical services for Manhattan Fire Department, which oversees Code operation, said Code mostly works with older houses that have been converted to allow

"We issue compliance stickers to apartments and houses, that basically say the building met Code's standards at the time of inspection," he said. "Not having a sticker doesn't necessarily mean the building is deficient, but it's in the interest of owners to get one. If we have to do research, it usually takes a while."

Tannehill said he's looking into a way to use the World Wide Web to make the database easily available.

Next, O'Donnell said, contact the manager for the house. This might be the land owner or a management team representing a land owner, he said. Have a look through the house, and make sure it's livable, he said.

"Then comes the lease agreement," O'Donnell said. "A lot of land owners like to look over your shoulder when you're signing. Say you'll need a day or so to look it over. It can be pretty complicated."

Tenants need to get land owners to promise in writing when they will fix what needs fixing, O'Donnell said.

Cornell Mayfield, director of human resources at Manhattan City Hall, said landlords are still responsible for maintenance, and as-is agreements aren't

The Kansas Landlord and Tenant Act explains the relationship between land owners and tenants as mandated by law, and O'Donnell recommends reading it. Copies of the act can be found at the Union Copy Center for $1.60.

Ag-business students learn without books

REBECCA AISTRUP

The agribusiness marketing class has been working on a presentation during the semester developing new ideas to promote products.

"In the past the class was taught with a textbook, but I wanted to change the concept that would give students a new experience," Mike Boland, assistant professor of agricultural economics, said.

"This was a chance for them to interact with businesses and teach them what kinds of problems small businesses face.'

Wednesday afternoon two groups gave presentations on better ways to promote products at K-State.

The first presentation was on the Call Hall Creamery. The presentation was given by Brent Grecian, Brandon Johnson, Dustin Petz, William Hicks and Scott Jeschke. The group hoped to come up with better ways to promote the product and develop a new flavor of ice cream. One example the group gave was a Bill Snyder flavor.

Having the product more readily available for consumers was a concern. Ideas included selling the product at events on campus such as at football games and at All University Open House and having more convenient hours, meaning staying open longer when there are events going on.

A survey was conducted to see how many people knew about the Call Hall Creamery. Of the people who answered the survey, 50.5 percent didn't know there was a creamery on cam-

The group felt the public would be better informed if advertising were increased by posting signs on campus and if stories were published in the Agriculturalist, Collegian and the K-Stater. Another idea for promotion was to develop an Internet homepage, so customers could learn what the creamery had to offer through the Internet. Because not everyone has access to the Internet, a catalog could be distributed to alumni that gives the prices and varieties of ice cream offered.

The products are currently sold at the K-State Student Union, Dara's Fast Lane, Dilly's Deli, the Call Hall Creamery and through mail orders.

With the mail order system now in place, the customer has to call in and ask what flavors are offered. With the catalog system the customer wouldn't have to ask for a list of the flavors and prices because they would be printed in the catalog.

Developing a new sign that could be placed outside of Call Hall was a way the group felt would boost sales. Two different signs for the creamery were designed. One read, "Call Hall Creamery - An Old Fashioned Dairy

Also proposed was a new cylinder package design. This would give a better look for the product, the group felt. The product is in a rectangular box.

The pricing of the product would be the same whether it was a seasonal or specialty product. There was also a possibility of having a value-pricing system - for example, if a person bought 10 items, he or she could get the next one free.

The other group presentation was a new design and promotion for the gift boxes sold through the K-State meats lab. These gift boxes contain cheddar and Swiss cheese and pork and beef products. The presentation was given by Jenny Graff, Kevin Kohake, Liz Neufeld, Adrian Sealine and Jason

"I was really proud of the product idea," Kevin Kohake, sophomore in agribusiness, said. "I knew we had a good product, but it wasn't promoted very well, and we had a lot of different options to promote it."

Strengths of the product included the fact that they are Kansas grown products and the product can be traced back to its origin. The group felt that this was a good asset, due to the threat of E-coli.

One of the most important things that the group wanted to improve was the design of the box. The box does not have a K-State logo. The group designed a logo to use on the product called Straight from Wildcat Land To Your Land.

Other weaknesses the group saw with the product were lack of marketing, high production costs and the advertising budget constraints.

The group recommended expanding the target market to alumni and students and increasing the advertising of the product.

The primary market for the product would be Manhattan, the state and alumni around the U.S.

Distribution of the product could be done in a similar way like the Call Hall Creamery idea. This idea would be through a catalog and priority mail.

The best way the group felt to promote the product would be during the holiday seasons, events on campus such as athletic games and All University Open House through advertisements and news articles.

"The students have had a lot of fun working on the presentations, and I have enjoyed it," Boland said.

Classical music offers study break from finals

BECKY WINTER

If studying for finals is not going well, check out the Trio Debranche performing at 3 p.m. Saturday in All Faiths Chapel.

The trio is composed of three K-State faculty members who will be playing the piano, violin and cello. They have been performing chamber music together for

"It's very interesting music. It's exciting and challenging to listen to," said Joe Brumbeloe, assistant professor of music and performer in the trio, said.

The performance will include one piece written by Mozart and another written by Medelssohn-Hensel.

Cora Cooper, associate professor of music and performer in the trio, said the group tries to include women composers, like Medelssohn-Hensel, in all of its performances.

There are a lot of good pieces written by women throughout the ages as well as today, but it is an area that has really been neglected," Cooper said. The performance will last about an hour, and Cooper said it could help students studying for the last couple weeks

"The new studies about Mozart say that they raise your IQ. Students should come to listen to a half hour of this music, and maybe they'll do better during finals," she said. "It's also going to be a lot of fun."

Brumbeloe said he thinks students should watch the

The report lists all features of all rooms in the building, and checks to see if anything is dirty or damaged.

Tenants should go through the house with the land owner to fill the report, or with an impartial witness, O'Donnell said. These should be filled out five days after moving in, he said.

"People need to use these if they want to make sure they get their security deposit back," he said. "It's not a bad idea to take pictures, too. Make copies of everything, and keep a file for yourself, and let the land owner keep another. When you move out, repeat the process.

If there's ever a problem, Mayfield said tenants need to put it in a letter to the land owner, and keep a copy for themselves.

"That way they don't have the excuse of not knowing what the complaints are," he said.

The provisions of the Kansas Landlord and Tenant Act allow for a 14-30 ultimatum if problems don't go away. Tenants can send a letter to their land owner and to Code that says the land owner has 14 days to fix the problem, or the tenant will move out in 30.

O'Donnell said tenants who go to K-State should also inform his office if this happens.

He said most land owners don't want the hassle of creating a new lease before the old lease expires, but for people who graduate in the spring, but own the lease through the summer, subleasing may be the only option.

Mayfield said that agreements with new tenants without a lease are generally a bad idea.

"Subleases basically make the tenant a land owner for the subleasee," he

A similar warning should appear on the front of Atari Teenage Riot's new compact disc "Burn, Berlin, Burn!" on Grand Royal/Digital Hardcore Recordings.

It's still spring, and this album is leading the charge for the best album of the year, and I don't think anything will top it.

ATR was formed in 1992 by Alec Empire, Hanin Elias and Carl Crack in Berlin, All three formed under a mutual love of high-energy music like Public Enemy, Huggy Bear and live Otis Redding albums. They came out of the techno/rave culture, which they saw as becoming very mainstream, and, at the same time, very right wing in nature. ATR has since severed all ties to

ATR mixes high-speed techno and jungle beats with crushing, deafening hardcore, punk and speed metal guitar riffs. They screamed lyrics about fighting fascism and smashing the system.

The end result is an absolutely glorious, brutal sound that will turn your brain into

"Burn, Berlin, Burn" is a combination of brand new songs and songs from their 1995 European-only album

It starts off deceivingly with "Start The Riot," and Elias cooing "I would die for peanut butter," as the drum beat from Public Enemy's "Bring The Noise" starts up. Within no time, that drum beat dissolves into utter, total chaos, with Empire screaming "GO!" at the top of his lungs.

With Empire's directive, the song quickly spirals into warp speed metal. It is an incredibly brutal song, with some really cool anime samples in the bridge

"Start The Riot" is the best song to ever The third song, "Sick To Death," sounds like some lost 1977 punk band like Sham 69, whom ATR has covered in the past, or UK

Subs meeting a techno DJ. It's a fantastic song. The title of the album comes from the chorus of this one. ATR doesn't hold anything back in their lyrical attack "P.R.E.S.S." is about their hatred of the music industry. The beats contained in this track are relentless My first introduction to ATR came from "Deutschland (Has Gotta Die)," which was on a 7-inch single released late last year. Luckily, it's now also included on this CD. "Destroy 2000 Years Of Culture" sounds like a post-apocalyptic hip-hop, and Alec Empire is leading the charge. The song "Not Your Business" features probably the fastest drum beats I have ever heard. Good thing it's a drum machine, because no human could possibly play that I must find out who Empire sampled the guitar part on "Heatwave" from, because it is awesome. Total punk rock. For their theme song, "Atari Teenage Riot," they sample Nirvana's classic "Smells Like Teen Spirit," and toss in some old school video game sounds. On this song, ATR screams about taking Berlin back from the West Germans

"Delete Yourself" compares life to a video game. It was also recorded live in Glasgow, Scotland in 1993. It is only a hint of how intense Atari Teenage Riot is live. The visual aspect is necessary to fully understand them. Death metal/techno gurus Fear Factory would be envious of "Into The Death." From the shriek of Empire urging the listener to "Bang your head!" to the brutal thrash metal guitars, this is one heck of a song. The chorus of "Into the death! Go! Go! Go!" will have you shouting along in no time. On "Speed," it sounds like they sampled a Metallica song for the guitar parts. I swear I've heard it somewhere before. ATR is like nothing you have ever heard before. They want a revolution, and they want it now. This is not for the weak-minded or weak-hearted.

If you think you can handle it, go buy 'Burn, Berlin, Burn!" now. Now, I tell you. You won't regret it. This is the soundtrack to the impending revolution.

Listen to it. A sound clip of Atari Teenage Riot's new compact disc "Burn, Berlin, Burn!" can be

Cujo stands out as top dog in NHL playoffs

With the tube tuned in to ESPN's Hockey Night and all of Tuesday's gradebearing activities on hold, I sat back in my confines, ready to absorb the tension and trauma produced by three Game Seven match-ups. Only one round into the Stanley Cup playoffs, and already six NHL teams were meeting in do-or-die scenarios. As the night progressed and three victors stepped forward, one word kept surfacing, slowly affixing itself onto my brain.

No, not the Stephen King canine-fromhell creation, but an equally fitting nickname for the Edmonton Oiler's goaltender Curtis Joseph. In the Game Seven matchup between Joseph's Oilers and the Dallas Stars, Cujo capped off a remarkable series by putting on a clinic of kick-saves and shutdowns that solidified his claim as the top performer early in the NHL Playoffs.

While other more recognized net-minders like Colorado's Patrick Roy and Buffalo's Dominick Hasek were busy occu-the headlines, Joseph was guiding his seventhseeded Oilers to a significant upset over Stars. Judged as good as dead by the media, Joseph inspired his squad to play the role of party crashers by putting the clamps on Dallas' offense and performing on a different level throughout

Game Seven's 38-save performance (which included a mid-air robbery in overtime that will spin again and again on highlight reels) was only the capper for a series dominated by Cujo. Against the high scoring Stars, Cujo lived up to his nickname by devouring Dallas' obvious offensive advantage. Within the series, Joseph recorded two shutouts, including a 43-save performance in Game Five.

What stood even more mind-boggling than Joseph's performance in the pipes was how he projected his world-beating attitude onto the youthful Oilers. At 30 years old, Cujo is the veteran leader of the Oilers, a squad composed of quick and inexperienced players still learning the ways of the ice. Basing their offense around breakaways and speed, the Oilers will rarely outshoot an opponent. This results in Edmonton's overreliance on Joseph in the net.

Oilers' downfall

At 30 years old, Cujo

come playoffs, Cujo's iron mentality and rubber-like limbs proved otherwise. With each silencing grab and amazing save, Joseph took the pressure off of his young teammates and seemed to tell them, "I'll bail us out, just keep trying."

Game Three of the Oilers-Stars series defines this message. Trailing Dallas 3-0 late in the third period, Joseph never quit, stopping numerous one-man advantages (Dallas converted only three of 39 powerplay attempts in the series). Cujo's acrobatics and third-period silencing brought back the Oilers' spirits and opened up the gates for an Oilers rally. Within the final three minutes, Edmonton scored three goals that sent the Oilers into an overtime victory and turned around the series.

Thanks to the exposure spawning from Edmonton's upset, Joseph's story is finally getting some recognition. Within Cujo's persona is an individual who entered the league as a free agent, skipped over in the NHL draft after a solid stay at the University of Wisconsin. Finally snatched up by St. Louis, Cujo gained a starting role with the Blues and remained guardian of the Arch until a disappointing 1995 season sent him to Edmonton. Initially unhappy with the trade, Joseph has since made the best out of his career up north.

Given the task of saving a young franchise, Cujo did all this and more with his 1996-97 regular season and playoff performance. Joseph's Iron Man image got even more padding after playing in more than 70 games and recording 4,000 minutes on the ice this season. More than just minutes though, Joseph kept the opponent's offense from running amuck on the young Oilers, recording a 2.93 goals against average. Standing just shorter than 6feet, Cujo relies on quick reflexes and unorthodox styles to keep the pipes empty. The silencer for Joseph, however, is what ESPN analyst Darren Pang calls a slow-breeding confidence. Joseph is ultimately a team player, and he uses his actions to inspire his teammates to perform beyond expectation, much like Buffalo's Hasek. With this weapon being wielded by Edmonton, the Oilers have aged quickly in the grueling world of the NHL Playoffs.

K-STATE'S SCOTT POEPARD watches his home run hit leave the diamond in the first game of a doubleheader against Bethany College at Frank Myers Field Wednesday. The home run was Poepard's 10th of the season and the 30th of his career, which tied a K-State record.

o call K-State' sweep of Bethany College a walk in the park is, well, an understatement.

The Cats blanked the Swedes 11-1 and 22-1 in a doubleheader at Frank Myers Field Wednesday. "We really got what we needed," K-State head coach Mike Clark said. "I can't think of a negative thing that came out of this game.'

In fact, just the contrary. There were many positives that came out of the series. Right fielder Scott Poepard became K-State's career home run leader, and shortstop Heath Schesser hit the cycle for the first time since Craig Wilson did it in 1992. Schesser also became K-State's single-season home run leader when he hit his 15th homer of the year In the first game of the twin bill, K-State began the rout in style as center fielder Garrett Bell led off the inning with a triple to right center and scored on Schesser's single to second base. Poepard doubled down the right-field line to knock in a run and scored on Yancy Ayres' single to left field, which also knocked in Schesser.

The Cats scored four runs on four hits in the first, and then the hits, well, just kepton coming.

In the second inning, destiny struck Poepard. In the left-handed batting position, Poepard hit a towering shot to right field that ended up on the roof of the Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

It was Poepard's 10th homer of the year, one which tied him with Dave Hendrix's career home run mark of 30. Then in the fourth inning it happened again, except this time Poepard hit the 31st homer of his career bat-

"It was great," Clark said. "We wanted to make sure that some of these guys had a chance to achieve some great individual honors, and this series gave us an opportunity to do so."

Poepard finished the game 3 for 4, including his 17th double of the season and four RBIs. The second game was no different as K-State spanked the Swedes 22-1 in just seven innings. The Cats got off to a heaping start as K-State rallied for 10 runs in the first inning off of merely 10 hits.

In the first, Schesser hit his 15th homer of the season after the two batters ahead of him were walked. Seven batters later, with the bases juiced, second baseman Todd Fereday hit his 7th homer of the year. It was just that kind of a day.

"Yeah, pretty much," Schesser said. "We really needed that though. It's been a long time since we've hit like that, and it was really just fun.'

Fereday began the third inning with a solo homer to right field, his second of the day. "It was real good for (batting practice), and we really had a good time out there," Fereday said. "It was great for confidence, and we haven't had fun like that

Of course, give credit to K-State's batters, who handled Bethany's pitches, which barely exceeded the 60 mph mark. 'Nobody really hit for the fence though," Schesser said. "Everybody just sat back and stayed within themselves and waited for the pitch to come to them." The Cats had another big inning in the fifth, whacking the Swedes for six runs on seven hits.

field line and knocked in Court. Two batters later, Schesser hit a dribbler to the shortstop that earned him the cycle for the game.

"I was real happy," Schesser said. "That was something that I had been trying to do for a while, but I really never had a chance to do it. It was a good feel-

Schesser accepted a tangible item to help him remember the game - a ball, which he put in his bag. K-State's final two runs came in the sixth inning off solo home runs from Bobier, his second of the game, and Morton, his first career home run as a

Chelsea chooses to travel over 3,000 miles to attend Stanford

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Ending months of speculation and rumor, Chelsea Clinton chose Stanford University as her next home, putting 3,000 miles between her and the iron gates on Pennsylvania Avenue.

"Planes run out there and phones work out there. E-mail works out there, so we'll be all right," President Clinton sighed.

The first couple's only child announced Wednesday in a single-sentence statement from Mom's press office that she would enroll at Stanford next fall.

"I'm just grateful this day has come," said first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton after being questioned almost daily about Chelsea's pick. "I think she wanted to branch out and be her own person ... make her own mark in the world."

The elite California university, with its sunny campus in the foothills south of San Francisco, had received 16,840 applications for just 1,610 freshman slots.

Chelsea, 17, toured the missionstyled campus with her mother last September and returned for a final look by herself only last weekend. Its world-class medical school might have been irresistible to the aspiring doctor; wind surfing classes on the San Francisco Bay could be a tempting side dish.

As a freshman, she will live in a residence hall. And she might want to risk her ballerina's knees and learn to Roller Blade. It's a preferred means of navigating the sprawling Tuition, books, room and board will set the Clintons back more than $31,000 a year, and they are unlikely to get a break. While Chelsea is known as an exceptional student at Washington's private Sidwell Friends School and was one of only 15,000 students nationwide to qualify as a National Merit semifinalist, Stanford scholarships are reserved for low-income students and athletic recruits.

The president's proposed "HOPE scholarship," a $1,500 per year tax credit for college tuition, would do little to dent the bill - even if his $200,000 salary didn't disqualify

In keeping with the strict zone of privacy kept around the president's daughter, aides refused to elaborate on the decision that was kept top secret to the end. Stanford president Gerhard Casper received word from the White House in a late-night call Tuesday

In a brief statement, the university said it is pleased to welcome Chelsea but was limiting comment "because she will be, from our point of view and in every way possible, a regular Stanford student.

She can take heart that, in golf superstar Tiger Woods' two years there, university officials reported no prying paparazzi. And television's "Wonder Years" star Fred Savage, a Stanford junior, has said that, some initial gawking aside, there is privacy amid the school's picturesque palms.

"Stanford is a place where people like that can fit in," said Ian Rhodes, a senior earth-systems major. He worried, though, about her Secret Service detail. "I feel sorry for Chelsea. She can't skip any of those early-morning classes if they're always with her.

Clinton's political aides suggested that the president will now travel even more to California - a boon to Democratic candidates, possibly including old Clinton pal Leon Panetta, in the state's 1998 gubernatorial race.

Chelsea had her pick of Ivy League and other top schools, including Dad's alma mater, Georgetown, just three miles from the White House

While known as a devoted daughter close to both parents, Chelsea also has an independent streak and travels on her own. At 13, she spent a week at an Alabama space camp, and at 15, she and her friends launched their summer vacation with a trip to New Yale would have been the romantic's choice (it was where Mom and Dad first met), but Chelsea, who twice toured the New Haven, Conn., campus chose otherwise.

"I listened, asked questions and attempted to have no influence whatever," the president shrugged.

With talk of Chelsea's imminent decision on the lips of White House officials at the highest level, never had so much been made about the college education of a president's

Reno faces questioning from Senate Republicans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Sharply criticized by the Senate Judiciary Committee chairman, a defiant Attorney General Janet Reno today stood by her refusal to recommend an independent counsel to investigate fund-raising abuses. She vowed not to bow to pres-

Confronting Republican senators who have demanded that she petition a federal court for a counsel, Reno told the committee she would act only when the law supports such an action. At that point, she said, she will not hesitate to invoke the statute.

Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, the leading critic of the attorney general, told her that her refusal to invoke the law "does not engender respect, admiration or, more importantly, public confidence in the Department of Justice.

"The time has come for attorney general Reno to consider the public skepticism regarding her decision," he said.

Reno, stubbornly repeating a refrain she has mentioned on several previous occasions, told the GOP-led panel "the standard in the law is clear and by now familiar. I am applying the law to the facts as we know them." Reno has extensively explained her position in letters to Hatch and other Republicans who have written her to demand appointment of a counsel.

"Let me be absolutely clear," Reno said. "I am not going to violate my oath in this matter because of pressure from any quarter, not from the media, not from Congress, nor from anywhere else. To do so would be wrong, and I will have no part in it."

Reno found there was no specific, credible evidence implicating the highest White House officials in felonies and said her prosecutors could handle the investigation of campaign fundraising.

"I am unable to agree, based on the facts and the law, that an independent counsel should be appointed to handle this investigation," she wrote Hatch.

Reno's prosecutors have been calling witnesses and presenting evidence to a federal grand jury. FBI Director Louis Freeh disclosed in March that the jury is investigating whether a foreign government tried to buy influence with the Clinton administration through large donations to the Democratic

It specifies an independent counsel must be named when specific, credible evidence of federal felonies exists against any of about two dozen of the highest officials, including the president, vice president and Cabinet of-

Another provision gives Reno discretion to seek a counsel if she finds the necessary evidence of a federal felony by a person not mentioned in the law - but whom the Justice Department would have a political, personal or financial conflict in prosecuting.

Reno's decision set off a political firestorm, but Republicans can do little more than complain. There are no provisions for Congress to force her hand.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., led the attack after the decision, calling it inexcusable.

"There is a clear conflict of interest when the attorney general appointed by the president is called upon to investigate possible illegal acts by the vice president or other highranking administration officials," Lott said.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich had joined in the criticism, saying Reno's reluctance brings into question whether she is the protector of the president or the enforcer of the Rhesa Dohrmann, senior in finance from English, KS, is an assistant building supervisor. Rhesa transferred to K-State after attending Dodge City Community College and said that coming here as a junior was like being a freshman all over again — not knowing many people. Working at the Rec has given her the opportunity to establish good friendships and meet a lot of people that she wouldn't have normally met. "It's an awesome job that fits well with my school schedule and it's not very stressful," Rhesa said. She also added that she is proud to be associated with Recreational Services. Rhesa will be graduating in May and has been offered a job in lending in Kansas City, but she is still exploring her possibilities.

For the past two years, Jereme Brueggemann has worked as a weight room and fitness area supervisor. The senior in elementary education from Shawnee, KS, chose the Rec as a place of employment because he enjoys working out and participating in sports. Jereme also wanted a job where he could be around his peers, so the Rec Complex was the perfect place for him. The benefits that Jereme receives from his job are that he is kept conscious of the benefits of physical fitness and how to best relate those benefits to others. Jereme also said that "seeing the dedication and motivation of others and the progress that results has helped to keep me motivated." After graduation in May, Jereme will be teaching elementary school in Kansas City.

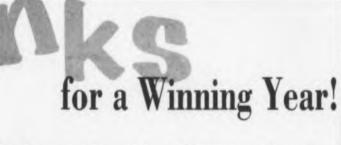

For Kristen Jackson, being a building supervisor is more than seeing that there is a safe environment at the Rec. It is about learning how to get along with coworkers, being exposed to a variety of people, and making life-long friendships. Kristen, a senior in life span and human development, said that having a positive relationship with coworkers makes doing her job a lot easier. She also said, "With so many activities at the Rec, you get a large variety of people in the facility and can meet many different people." Kristen admits to being somewhat timid prior to working at the Rec Complex but now is more open to people and other ethnic groups. Kristen has worked at the Rec for two years and is from Shawnee, KS. She will be graduating this May, getting married in 1998, and plans to relocate to San Diego to teach in early childhood development.

Nutrition Notes

As people try to lose weight for the summer, it is important to remember that diet needs to be combined with exercise. Calorie restriction alone may lead to the loss of muscle mass instead of fat. A negative caloric balance of 500 kcal per day, along with at least 20 minute of vigorous exercise, three times a week, will allow for about one pound of fat loss.

restriction with an aerobic-type exercise; i.e. walking, jogging, biking or swimming. The exercise should be done continuously for 30-60 minutes, 3-5 days a week

Architecture department OKs Shapiro

The Department of Architecture has a new leader.

Mark Shapiro has been named the head of the department, effective June 1.

After a nationwide search, he was chosen to lead the department. which consists of about 300 students and 36 faculty. The previous head was Susanne Siepl-Coates, who completed her term and will be taking another position within the department.

Shapiro is a registered architect in New York and Louisiana. He was an associate professor at Syracuse University School of Architecture from 1985 to 1996. He is currently in private practice in New Orleans.

Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, said Shapiro will fit right into the K-State sys-

"I don't know who's more excited, him or us," Law said. "It was a 100-percent consensus that he'd be ideal for the position."

Shapiro has worked at Tulane University School of Architecture and the Boston Architectural Center.

He has a bachelor's degree from the University of Cape Town School of Architecture and a master's of city planning and urban design from Harvard University Graduate School of Design.

Senators argue Laramie issue, decide not to oppose closing

BENJAMIN YODER

Student Senate voted not to oppose the closing of Laramie Street Thursday night after almost three hours of debate.

Carlton Getz, engineering senator, said he was concerned that Senate should not be offering an opinion on the Laramie Street closing because it was a city matter and not a University

"What we have here is the Aggieville Business Association using the Senate floor as a battle ground for a city issue. What we have here is the Manhattan Christian College using the Senate floor as a battle ground for a city issue. What we have here is Laramie residents using the Senate floor as a battle ground for a city issue," Getz said.

Patrick Carney, governmental relations committee chair said MCC students have to cross a street that averages more than 3,000 vehicles a day at least 10 times a day.

"Imagine if we had to go from Eisenhower to the Union and you had to cross Anderson in front of trucks, and you didn't have a streetlight to stop anybody and nobody really cared to stop for you," he said.

VICTORY IN BRITISH VOTE. LONDON - The Labor Party stormed toward a landslide election victory Friday, ending 18 years of Conservative rule and setting the stage for 43-year-old Tony Blair to become the youngest prime minister in 185 years. By early Friday, Labor had won 154 of the first 175 districts to officially declare and was virtually assured to winning the 330 seats needed to take power. In exit polls immediately after voting ended Thursday night, the British Broadcasting Corp. projected that Labor would take 47 percent of the vote, compared to just 29 percent for the Conservatives - the poorest Conservative showing since 1832.

In power since Margaret Thatcher ousted the last Labor government in 1979, the Conservatives were battered by divisions about Britain's future role in Europe and a widespread sense they had simply been around too long.

Blair and his party fought a disciplined, slick six-week campaign from the political center after dumping a raft of Wednesday favored a strike, said Danny Mallett, bargaining chairman of United Auto Workers Local 31. More than 2,000 of the local's 3,500 members voted on the proposal.

Talks continued Wednesday, and no strike date has been set. The plant produces the Pontiac Grand Prix and the Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme.

Jim Russell, president of Local 31, said General Motors has increased the speed of the Fairfax assembly line without adding workers to the line. The union wants about 150 additional workers. UAW's International office has not intervened, Russell said. It must send negotiators to assess the situation before the local can call for a walkout. GM has confirmed it is negotiating with the union on a local issue but has not discussed

The Fairfax plant has begun building a new Oldsmobile, the Intrigue, which is expected to reach dealer showrooms in June. The launching of the Intrigue could be disrupted if a strike takes place at socialist policies and adopting the Conservatives' pro-business and low-tax Independent Television News said its exit poll projected a huge Labor victory, with 159 more seats in the 659-seat House of Commons than any other party. That would mean a bigger Labor triumph than the one that swept Winston Churchill out of office in 1945.

"It looks like we're going to win in very good fashion indeed," said Labor's deputy leader, John Prescott, savoring the first exit poll reports.

LABOR DAY MARKED WITH PICNICS, MARCHES, PROTESTS.

Workers marked the May Day labor holiday on Thursday with street protests around the world. Russians lambasted Yeltsin. Mexicans cursed Clinton. Germans protested unemployment. South Koreans marched against corruption.

Mexicans poured into their capital to denounce economic policies under the North American Free Trade Agreement, which linked Mexico's economy to those of the United States and Canada.

Students who have children will have an opportunity to alleviate a little stress during finals week.

Mortar Board honorary will be offering free child care in Union 207 Monday through Thursday of finals week. Parents can drop off their children anytime after 5 p.m. and the volunteers will be there until 10 p.m. The service is free of charge.

"We will be having activities between 5 and 10 p.m. each night, and parents can bring their kids whenever

Aaron Ball, junior mechanical engineering, said.

Call Kim Ebben at 776-9323 for There will be information about board games, free child care cards, books and during finals we'll probably get week Disney some

"We'll keep them entertained for the evening," he said.

Ball said there will be at least three Mortar Board volunteers with the children at all times. The K-State students will work in shifts during the evenings, one from 5 to 7:30 and the second from 7:30 to 10.

Kim Ebben, service team leader for Mortar Board, said they are trying to coordinate an activity with the bowling alley so the children could bowl.

The only thing parents would have to pay for would be bowling, and it would only be like a dollar an hour," Ball said.

Mortar Board performed the same service last semester, and Ball said he thought they had about 10 children each

Busy next week? Try not to forget to do these things nother semester is winding to a close, and students all across campus are realizing they have run out of time. The essentials of studying and celebrating are at the forefront of students' minds, although not necessarily in that order. There are still a few last minute things that shouldn't be forgotten.

The following list is a guide to keep you safe and ahead of the game during this last

10. Enroll. All the good classes may be gone, but if you wait much longer, in-coming freshman are going to take all the bad classes

9. Financial Aid. If you do plan to return next year, make sure you can pay for it.

8. Finalize leases. No, you can't sleep in the basement of Seaton Hall and shower in Ahearn Field House. At least not for long. Get something lined up now and avoid the mid-August search to find the last available apartment, which is inevitably somewhere in

7. Clean your apartment. It may seem like a good idea to clean the day before you move out, but your landlord disagrees. Start working on the beer stain from Oktoberfest now, and it may be half-hidden by time check-out day comes around.

6. Graduates, prepare to leave. Fax those announcements, buy the Union's display cap and gown and check your grades. Graduation may be more for the parents, but they will hurt you if you forget.

5. Attend class. You may have gotten away with sleeping until noon so far this semester, but getting up for that 8:30 review may come in handy

4. Double check your final times and places. They do change. It's a fact of campus life. Few professors are understanding to a person who shows up for the 7:30 a.m. final in Willard Hall at 2:05 p.m. in Waters Hall.

3. Pick up your 1997 Royal Purple Yearbook. The books are in Monday through Wednesday by the K-State Student Union. Remember to bring a body builder to carry it

2. Be responsible when blowing off steam. Study breaks are great, but that half-hour break in Aggieville will become a little longer when you are taken downtown for a DUI and disorderly conduct. The words for this week, boys and girls: designated driver, moderation and consideration for others. Can you say that? Good. We knew you could.

1. Mother's Day. It's May 11. You may not have much of a life this week, but what little you do have, you owe to her. She brought you into this world. Forget her, and she will take

O SYSTEM FOR FOOTBALL TICKETS UNFAIR TO UNDERCLASSMEN

K-State has 20,000 students enrolled and only allows 10,622 tickets for them, about half of the students. Without college students, there wouldn't be a football team.

Therefore, students wanting to attend should be allowed. The demand for football tickets is way greater than the supply. K-State needs to increase the amount of tickets allowed for students by 1,000 and change back to a straight lottery sys-

The new seniority system alienates freshmen. Seven hundred tickets for 6,000 freshmen just isn't right. Eighty-nine percent of freshmen won't get their fair shot at game tickets. They didn't take in mind the whole University's good when the decision was made.

Freshmen need to be allowed to support their football team. The student section could be much more intense with 1,000 more youthful, loud, screaming freshmen. Freshmen have the same rights as everybody

Freshmen pay tuition, including an athletic fee of more than $200 that helps support the football team. They shouldn't have to pay an athletic fee if they can't participate in the activities for which it pays. Freshmen must put just as much effort into classes as upperclassmen, doing their part at the University. The University pays them back by excluding them from one of K-State's greatest benefits.

The athletic department should reserve 1,000 more football tickets for students in general admission section 23, next to the student seating and then change back to a straight lottery system. This would allow almost every K-State student a shot at a chance to support their team. Last year, football generated $3,452,318 in revenue; the 1,000 tickets would cause an $83,000 cut in revenue

It costs extra to allow student tickets. Student season tickets are $60 while general admission season tickets are $160. This would only cause a 2.4-percent cut in revenue to the athletic fee to cover the extra cost. This allows students who want tickets to get them.

Eight dollars might seem like a lot to non-football fan students. A good number of people don't want to pay for something not personally used. They must understand that the extra tickets will help the University as a whole.

The increasing football revenue and football related alumni donations can be used to help all K-State programs. K-State now needs money for a new baseball stadium and new computer equipment. Supporting the football program could eventually get money for something non-fans

Getting the extra tickets allows more student involvement in the football program. Our increased student attendance will help us win games. The crazy student section is without a doubt the loudest section in KSU Stadium. They help distract the defense of K-State's noble opponents and cheer us to victory.

The extra tickets would allow most students to go to the football games. Very few juniors and seniors would get shut out of games (solving the upset alumni donation problem in the old straight lottery system). Freshmen can get involved early and stay Wildcat fans for their entire time at the University. Hopefully, the y will become happy supportive alumni. All this for $6!

Grisly facts

REALITIES ABOUT THE DEATH PENALTY CHANGE OPINIONS concept, is constitutional.

But as practiced it is unconstitutional, as well as expensive and fallible.

Why have it, then? Do murderers deserve to die?

Do we rape rapists, or burn down an arsonists house?

I'm going to eschew a clever introduction today and pick up where I left "does not invariably violate the Constitution" if administered in a manner off last week on why the death penalty is wrong, beginning with a list of state-mandated methods of murder:

 Hanging. This is still used in some states today. It is far from precise. If the drop is too short, death comes via gradual strangulation. If too long, the jerk of the rope tends to rip the head off the body.

· Electrocution. In 1990, Florida death row prisoner Jesse Tafero lived for at least four minutes in the electric chair after the switch was thrown. Ashes fell from his bobbing head prior to his eyes bursting out of their sockets. His body burned bright red as his skin swelled. Often, prisoner's bodies catch afire before death. It took three jolts of electricity and 10 minutes of excruciating pain to kill another prisoner in Alabama in 1983.

 The gas chamber. Far cleaner than hanging and electrocution, nevertheless it does not guarantee a quick death. A cyanide pellet is dropped into sulfuric acid to form a deadly gas, which may take minutes to knock a prisoner unconscious. Many more minutes pass as the heart and brain die of The death penalty, as a · Lethal injection. First used in Texas in 1982, it is the most common method of execution today. Hailed as inexpensive and "humane," lethal injection is frequently botched due to mismeasurement of chemicals. Stephen McCoy lasted five minutes after injection, coughing and heaving in full consciousness before dying due to a weak dosage. Surgery is sometimes required to cut into a deeper vein, resulting in excruciating pain and an even longer death watch.

I don't see how any thinking and feeling human being could not call these methods cruel and unusual punishments. No matter how heinous the prisoner's crimes, nothing can justify these torturous, inhumane and premeditated executions at the hands of the State.

The death penalty, as practiced, is therefore unconstitutional under the Eight Amendment, which states that "cruel and unusual punishments (shall not be) inflicted."

The practice of the death penalty is also in strict defiance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, a document co-sponsored and signed by the United States after World War II. More:

• The death penalty is unconstitutional under the 14th Amendment, which states that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States ... nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In 1972, the Supreme Court ruled that state laws governing capital punishment were applied in an "arbitrary and capricious" manner, and invalidated hundreds of scheduled executions.

In 1976, the Court rescinded that decision, ruling that the death penalty that guards against arbitrariness and discrimination. However, a 1990 study of death penalty statistics conducted by the U.S.

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

General Accounting Office revealed that "in 82 percent of the studies, race of victim was found to influence the likelihood of being charged with capital murder or receiving the death penalty, i.e. those who murdered whites were found more likely to be sentenced to death than those who murdered

The Death Penalty Information Center reported in 1996 that "over 80 percent of the victims in death penalty cases are white, even though only 50 percent of murder victims (as a whole) are white."

Since 1974, 84 percent of the victims of those actually executed have been white. Separate studies in New Jersey, California and Georgia support these findings.

Blacks comprise around 12 percent of the U.S. population yet of the 3,859 persons executed since 1930, more than 50 percent have been black. Nearly 90 percent of men executed for the crime of rape since 1930 have been black.

> And, since 1988, 33 of the 37 federal death penalty prosecutions, including all approved by Janet Reno, have involved black and other minority defendants

Currently around 2,000 people are on death row; more than 40 percent are black, and a disproportionate number are Native American, Latino or Asian. Nearly all are poor. Capital punishment, indeed: Only those without the capital get the punishment.

The death penalty, as a concept, is constitutional. But as practiced it is unconstitutional, as well as expensive and fallible. Why have it, then? Do murderers deserve to die? Do we rape rapists, or burn down an arsonist's

Does murder demand an emotion-fueled retribution? Isn't that why we allow the State to dictate justice, so as to remain as objective as possible? If we turned this kind of justice over to the public, wouldn't it be ... murder?

"An eye for an eye ... ?" Anyone citing this needs to complete the passage: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Christ's interpretation of "lex talionis", the Mosaic law of retribution, realizes it's original purpose: To set limits to vengeance, not to promote it.

This column is little else but facts - hard and cold. Believe what you will, but never question the power of fact.

I'm credible here. Before coming to K-State, I was in favor of the death penalty. Since then, I've learned my lesson.

Bands to perform swing, big-band music tonight

REBECCA AISTRUP

The second-annual Big Band Bash will be at 8 tonight at Union Station.

The Concert Jazz Ensemble, lab bands and the Manhattan High School Blue Notes will perform.

"The purpose of the bash is really for all of the bands to get together and play," Rob Roman, graduate student in music, said. "It is fun for everyone involved because you have the chance to hear what other bands have been doing throughout the semester."

Most of the music to be performed will be big band music, swing charts and jazz music. Dennis Wilson, assistant professor of music, has composed and arranged a song that the Concert Jazz. Ensemble will perform, Roman said. Dan Beach, Michael Brown and Chris Erker, who are members of the Concert Jazz Ensemble, have also written and arranged a song that the Concert Jazz Ensemble will perform, Roman

The last number will be all of the bands performing together.

"This is the last chance the students will have to perform together," Teto Henderson, Union Program Council program adviser, said. "It gives students a chance to show their stuff."

The Big Band Bash is open to the pubic, and there is no charge. It is just a come-and-go type of performance, Henderson said.

"It is like a party and performance at the same time, because it is so informal," Roman said.

New playwright finds outlet

JOHN HENDERSON

Playwright Dana Green's first work, "One plus One is Eleven," will be presented for free on the K-State campus at 2 p.m. Sunday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

The performance is the last in the 1997 spring series of Playwrights Stage. Marci Maullar, associate professor in speech, said the Stage is set up by the theater department for all interested new playwrights, to introduce their work to the community and receive feedback.

Maullar said most of the playwrights who present their plays through the Stage have taken the Advanced Playwriting course taught by the department of speech communication, theater and dance at K-State.

Green, who is from Israel and a graduate student in theater, said her play's main theme deals with a modern way of meeting a special someone, the dating service. She hopes those who see her play will be able to relate to the characters.

"The main thing that I try to find with this play," Green said, "is a way to see with a comic eye the problems with finding the right man or right woman. That's something that I think many other people would like to find."

Rachel Hart, graduate student in rhetorical communication, said playwrights have trouble promoting themselves, and it takes help.

Hart presented a play last month.
"It's hard, when you're a new artist, and you haven't had much feedback," she said.

The performance of "One plus One is Eleven" will be followed by a forum open to anyone in the audience who wants to express their impressions and criticisms of the play, she said.

"It's a story that should be familiar to many," she said. "I want to feel their reaction, to see how they identify, and hear them speak about what they

Lavish lifestyles of sport stars crush dreamers

I think if it were not for the fact I weigh less than most helmets and am about the size of a tee, I would tryout for the K-State

I also think if it were not for the fact I have never swung a club in my life, I could be like Tiger Woods.

These are silly thoughts, I admit. However, with the popularity Woods has given to the game of golf, some people now believe they can be superstars just like him.

People are hitting the links and sending their kids to golf camps in record numbers.

One thing Woods has done for the game that may not be for the best - is fuel unrealistic dreams for some kids. Parents are putting their little ones into these rigorous training facilities in hopes of creating the next big golf thing. It does not matter if that their kids possess about as much talent as pile of

The same can be said for tennis camps. The Nike Tennis Camp offers live-in training for those wishing to drop out of school to pursue their dreams of being profession-

The fact is, these youngsters will probably never reach stardom.

According to a recent report on CBS, people are born with most of the athletic ability they are meant to have.

The minute they come kickin' and screamin' out, they are ready to be stars. They are born with it, just like some are born with red hair or an outie belly button.

While skills can be honed and polished (and belly buttons can be snipped), the fact is if you were not born to be a star, you probably cannot be molded into one.

Talent does not grow on trees. This is hard for some parents to understand. These days, parents take their children's athletics way too seriously. Remember Todd Marinovich? While I guess you probably do not, Marinovich's father raised him to be an NFL quarterback.

His childhood consisted not of playing tag but instead he played two-a-days with his dad. Marinovich eventually made it to the NFL, but his career was short and troubled.

To add insult to injury, Marinovich was recently arrested for a slew of felonies, one of which included cultivation of marijuana. He is now wandering San Francisco as a guitarist in a band. I am not kidding I think it is sad when parents look at their kids as little money machines. With the exception of Woods, it never seems to come out sunny.

Look at Jennifer Capriati - same story,

At 13, Capriati won a gold medal at the 1992 Olympics. She was on her way to stardom - then came the breakdown.

Capriati quit the pro tennis tour and then proceeded to drop out of high school. Her downfall was capped off by an arrest for marijuana possession in 1994.

These kids, and that is really what they are, are thrust into the international spotlight mostly unknowing of what is to come.

And for some it proves to much. Going from allowances to owning jets can play tricks on a kids ego.

Like I said, Woods is an exception to the rule. He may be a $60-million man with his own private jet, but he seems to have things in order. As a baby, he watched his dad swing clubs. He was just destined to be a golfer.

Woods was born with athletic talent, and through the years, with great help from his Green Beret father, he has turned himself into a genuine big thing.

The kid has a good head on his shoulders, so I do not foresee him breaking down anytime soon. You can leave that to the seasoned pros: Fuzzy, watch your mouth.

I agree that it is good for kids to get involved in sports but, for the most part, it should stop there. A weekend recreation and not much else.

Parents should realize their kids are just playing. While it may be something serious to you, they are just playing for the fun of K-State golf coach, Mark Elliott, wants to play for the fun of it.

He resigned his post Thursday, and he now wants to pursue his dream of becoming a professional duffer.

I guess the thought of becoming a star is not limited to kids - just dreamers.

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

K-State men's golf coach Mark Elliott announced his resignation Thursday to pursue a career in professional golf. Elliott, who just finished his seventh season at K-State, coached the Wildcats to a seventh-place finish at the Big 12 Championship earlier this week after being picked for last in a poll of conference coaches.

"We are sorry to see Mark leave," Max Urick, the Director of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said. "We respect his decision and admire his ambitions and determination to be competitive as a player on the professional level.

"He made a major contribution during a significant growth period with both the men's and women's golf teams. We certainly wish him the best."

Elliott, a native of Silver Lake, joined the K-State staff in 1990 as an assistant men's coach and head women's coach. He was head coach of both programs until 1995, when he became the men's coach exclusively. Elliott was named the 1992 Big 8 Coach of the year.

Before Elliott coached at K-State, the women's team had never finished out of last place in the Big 8, and despite being picked for last place every year, his men's team never finished last.

In 1993, Elliott, a former quarterback coach at Washburn University, led the men's team to its first-ever appearance at the NCAA Central Regional Tournament. He also coached Valerie Hahn to the NCAA Tournament as the first member of a women's team to make an appearance in the NCAA Championships.

"I would like to thank the Kansas State family for the wonderful support that myself and our golf program received in the last seven years," Elliott said. "I am proud of the accomplishments that our golf program has had since 1990. We became the first men's team in Kansas State history to go to the NCAA Tournament, and we had the first men and women individual players go to the NCAA Championships."

Snyder not completely satisfied with spring practice session

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY

en though the spring football practice season ends with the game Saturday, K-State head coach Bill Snyder said his team is not where it needs to be at this time.

Furthermore, Snyder said he is not even looking forward to the game.

"No, I'm not really, but I'm sure the kids are," Snyder said. "They're tired of banging on each other."

Snyder said even though they have almost completed their practice schedule, they still need more time.

"We're struggling a little bit. We're not nearly as good as I would like to be after this number of practice dates," he said.

Snyder said he would just as soon have a practice rather than an actual game, but did say the spring game had some positives.

"It is a practice for us," Snyder said. "At least the kids get to play in front of some people for a change. It gives your players a chance to have a feeling of team concept." With the loss of defensive end Nyle Wiren, wide receiver Kevin Lockett and defensive backs Chris Canty and Mario Smith, Snyder refuses to say that this year is a year of rebuilding. "We won't make reference to it. We don't want to do it," Snyder said. "We want to make progress. It's true, we will be young and inexperienced, but I don't perceive it as trying to rebuild this program."

The main thing Snyder will concentrate on in the spring is making every player at every position better.

"Our preparation during the spring is to try and get every player better," Snyder said. "We certainly have some weaknesses - like replacing playmakers - but we have some strengths too, and the main one is our depth. Our depth is better not just in numbers, but also in quality." Even quarterback hopeful Jonathan Beasley refuses to call this football year a rebuilding year. "Those guys were great, and they did a lot for this team," Beasley said. "We have a whole new team this year, and we're working hard so we'll be all right."

Snyder said on the offensive side the team needs to work a little harder. He said Marlon Charles and Mike Lawrence, plus freshman David Allen, are gaining ground each day.

"Offensively, we hope to enhance our running game a little bit," he said. "There's so many areas of the game that I think honestly need improvement. Marlon has made a minimal number of mistakes, and Marlon's ready

At the wide receiver position, Snyder said he really didn't have a clue who could fill in the spot, but did mention Allen, Everett Burnett, Troy Hackney, DeAndrea Robinson and David Ries as the top performers for the

On Tuesday, Snyder never mentioned who was the front runner for the quarterback position but always mentioned Beasley, Adam Helm and Casey Vidricksen in the same breath.

Snyder said he was impressed with the offensive line, who had a little more tenacity in them than last year's group.

"They have a tougher mindset. Their field presence is a lot better," Snyder said. "They go to the line of scrimmage with a sense of eagerness.'

On the defensive end, Snyder said his main concern was at the strong safety spot.

"My concern is at the strong safety spot and at the other cornerback," he said. "Strong safety is going to turn out to be a challenge. They haven't done anything that disappoints

Snyder said he expected Lamar Chapman to fill in for Mario Smith. Snyder also referred to the names of Joe Bob Clements. Nilijah McCoy and Chris Johnson.

Cats look to carry confident attitude into 3-game series with KU

Fresh off a combined score of 33-2 against Bethany College, the surging offense of the Wildcats leads them to Jayhawk country this weekend in the final Big 12 series of the season. K-State head coach Mike Clark said he was not sure if the carefree series with Bethany would carry over to the series with KU. "I hope that the confident attitude carries over," Clark said. "But really I don't know if it will carry over or not." The Cats, 26-22 overall, 7-20 in the Big 12, are out of the Big 12 tournament race, but could play the role of spoiler as the Jayhawks are a half game out of the sixth and final spot in the tournament standings.

Second baseman Todd Fereday, who knocked in two homers in the second game of the doubleheader Wednesday, said he was looking forward to the series between the Jayhawks. "It (the Bethany series) was a nice little tune up for us," Fereday said. "At least it gave us an pportunity to have a little fun. Sometimes with all the pressure in this game and in this conference it is nice just to take a break, but I don't think it will hurt us heading into KU." Only the top six teams in the conference make the postseason.

K-State dropped a 5-4 decision to Kansas on April 15, when the Cats were up 4-2 in the ninth, allowing three runs to let the Jayhawks escape with the win.

David Johnson took the loss in front of a record crowd at Frank Myers Field.

Eric Yanz will get the start for the Cats on Friday night at 7 at Hoglund-Maupin Stadium. Mickey Blount and Jon Oiseth will split the final two games at 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. The Wildcats next home game is Tuesday against Wichita State, the first game of a home series with the Shockers. K-State plays at Wichita Wednesday night.

In other notes, K-State announced the signing of some recruits for next year's squad.

Scott Voos, an INF/OF from Manhattan High School, signed a letter of intent yesterday to play for the Cats next year. He comes in as a twosport star in high school, gaining First Team I-70 League honors as a senior in football.

In addition to Voos, K-State snagged three other recruits this past fall.

Jeff Schuler, a first baseman out of Topeka Seaman High School joins Chad Cosens, a southpaw and Trent Bridges, a right-handed pitcher from Fort Scott Junior College.

At 294-304, Clark is the all-time winningest coach in K-State baseball history. With eight games remaining, he needs six to reach the 300 win plateau.

Calls to the Keyes home were answered by a machine.

In Fort Davis, Texas, 13 members of a separatist group were believed to be in a trailer, led by Republic of Texas leader Richard McLaren. Thursday was the fifth day of a standoff that began after Republic of Texas members took two neighbors hostage to protest the arrest of some followers.

The hostages have been released, but the standoff continues.

Keyes had filed documents with the Shawnee County registrar of deeds in February, drawing the attention of sheriff's detective J.D. Mauck. The documents claim the Republic of Texas includes a chunk of Kansas south and west of Dodge City, bound on the north by the Arkansas River.

The area apparently includes seven Kansas counties and parts of six others. Mauck said he believed Keyes was with the group. He said a St. Marys resident had told him that Keyes had called from Fort Davis asking for reinforce-

The McLaren group is one of three factions of the Republic of Texas that maintain Texas was annexed illegally by the United States. They demand a statewide referendum on independence.

Keyes filed documents on two occasions in February with the Shawnee County deeds office. The first was signed by Keyes, and another was signed by two women, said county registrar Marilyn Nichols.

The documents, with McLaren's signature, were called affidavits of deed and conveyance, Nichols said.

The documents were recorded, but no action on them will be taken because none of the land described is in Shawnee County, Nichols said.

They describe a large tract of land of more than 250 million acres stretching from part of Kansas to the Rio Grande and claim it for the Republic of Texas, Nichols said.

The document says it is an amended territorial deed to one filed in 1987 by Archie Huel Lowe, described as the president of the Republic of Texas, and McLaren, described as the consul gener-

"I think it's a rather unusual document," Nichols said. "It's not something we see too often."

After the documents were filed, they were mailed to Fort Davis, Nichols said.

Senate also voted to repeal the student health insurance plan although the plan will still be offered to students.

Lisa Dethloff, arts and sciences senator, said it was not Senate's duty to endorse G-M Underwriters, the health plan providers.

"I don't think we should be endorsing G-M Underwriters," she said.

In other business, Senate approved an annual $5 registration charge for all groups wanting to be acknowledged as a University Activities Board group.

The fee will be used to pay for workshops and handbook improvements that UAB is unable to provide.

Senate also clarified a bill last year's Senate had passed. Three sections in the Student Publications Equipment Fee were amended because of constitutional concerns.

Manhattan's own Wasted Potential is keeping jazz alive here in the Little Apple. Every Friday night at Auntie Mae's Parlor in Aggieville, the band entertains crowds of students, community members and K-State faculty with three hours of various jazz Bill McFarlin, trumpet, said their musical styles stretch across the jazz spectrum.

'We play a broad range of music. We're steeped in the roots of bee-bop, but we also branch out and perform numbers in Dixieland, swing and in a straight ahead jazz style."

Wasted Potential, formed four years ago, is used as an outlet for each member to vent their musical talents, McFarlin said.

'We're not in the mode of trying to go for it or make it big. There's just no need to do that. But that doesn't mean we don't consider ourselves professionals," McFarlin said.

Vocalist Betty'O Jones has had quite an extensive professional career, he said. A year and a half ago her voice brought her a first-place finish on Showtime at the Apollo. She was also the lead in the Asian tour of "Ain't Misbehavin" and has had a couple hit records in Europe.

Bill Lee, piano and executive director of the International Association of Jazz Educators, said he has played with the likes of Charlie Parker, Gene Krupa and Jerry Mulligan. Lee has written over 100 published books and compositions and has two doctorates in music

Lee has also had an extensive academic career. He was the dean of music at Sam Houston State University, the University of Texas at San Antonio and the executive vice president and provost of the University of Miami. While at Miami, Lee was also responsible for the hiring of Jimmy Johnson as coach of its football team, he said.

Rounding out the seven member group are Michael Brown on bass, Jim Cann on trombone, Bill Harshbarger on saxes and Brian Brooks, senior in marketing, on drums. Brooks said playing with such talented musicians proved to be rough in the beginning.

"I was completely intimidated at first, but they're great people and easy to get along with. They're very supportive," Brooks trap set, he said he still learns a lot from the other members.

When you play with people who have that much experience you can't help but feed off them. You learn different approaches to the same stuff. It's almost a spiritual thing," Brooks said.

Even though they take their music seriously, the band has yet to release a recording. Lee said because of their careers, the one night each week they play is the only night they can get togeth-

Theater group to improvise in Nichols this weekend

RACHAEL KRUEGER

Sex, religion, politics and AIDS awareness.

"Live Stuff '97," is a comic improvisational production performed and arranged by KSU Theatre honorary Theta Alpha Phi. The troupe will perform at 8 tonight and Saturday in Nichols Theatre. "It's very in your face at times," Director Dan Shea said. "But it is very, very funny."

Twenty-three students from all majors will perform nearly 25 skits to raise money for the Riley County Regional AIDS Project. This is the fifth year for the production.

"Some of the skits are five seconds, and some are three to four minutes," Shea said. "Some may change from night to night."

Shea said he has one hope for the audience.

"I want them to leave with an open mind," he said Scripts do not exist for the students, only brief outlines topics assigned to them at the first rehearsal.

"We had the name of our skit and that's all," Tracey Hull, performer and senior in theater, said. Rehearsals began only Sunday, forcing the performers work at a challenging pace, Hull said. The students then developed ideas for the skits entirely on their own. Hull said her goal for the audience is two-fold. "I want them to have a good time, but also realize the serious issues," she said. Not everyone can do improvisational acting, said Erin Mansur-Smith, a graduate student in theater. Mansur-Smith performed in past performances, and she is currently aiding Shea.

"You have to have a special sense of time, and a special rhythm," she said. "It's a real sense of exhilaration when everything works."

The hardest part of improvisational acting is knowing what's funny and what's not, Mansur-Smith said.

"What you think is funny doesn't always work on stage," she said.

The production confronts controversial issues with a continuous storyline, in which humans are looked upon as a disease by aliens, Mansur-Smith said. "There's a very definite message," she said.

Mansur-Smith said some of the skits have a hard edge

HARASSING THE DEAD

In February, the electric co-op in the Philippine province of Illocos Norte shut off power to the refrigerated crypt of former president Ferdinand Marcos because his wife, now a member of the legislature, is about $215,000 behind in the electricity bill.

The government will not permit Marcos to be buried in Manila because he was suspected of having appropriating billions of dollars during his 20-year reign that ended in 1986.

Shutting off power, said Marcos, was "the ultimate harassme the harassment of the dead."

West Virginia campus brawl injures 3

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTGOMERY, W.Va. - An end-of-theschool-year party turned into a brawl that injured at least three people early Thursday near West Virginia University Tech's campus, police said. Several citations were issued.

The fight began about 11 p.m., and it took police several hours to clear the area, said James F. Higgins Jr., the city's mayor and acting police chief.

Higgins said about 25 students at a fraternity party and up to 20 young townspeople across the street exchanged insults, and fights broke out.

'Most of it was words. When we got enough officers, they shut it down and sent everybody inside and that was the end of it," Higgins said.

Police from at least seven communities were summoned, a police spokesman said.

Two people were treated for minor injuries at Montgomery General Hospital and released. A third, a student, was held for observation today. A hospital spokesman said he did not know the extent of the student's injuries.

Higgins said several people were cited for disorderly conduct, public intoxication and underage drinking.

Officers planned to meet with Fayette County prosecutors to discuss whether additional charges would be brought, Higgins said.

Ellen's coming-out episode hype pays off big for ABC "Ellen" sponsor that pulled out of this episode, had to set up a phone

NEW YORK - Months of hype about the coming-out episode of "Ellen" paid off for ABC.

The hourlong program scored a 23.4 rating and 35 share in Nielsen Media Research's overnight measurements - more than twice its usual audience and comparable to a typical episode of "ER," the year's top-rated show.

Advertisers tailored special messages for "Ellen" - and paid special prices. Chrysler, a regular line to deal with the calls about its decision.

The ratings indicated that 35 percent of the nation's TV sets on at the time were tuned to "Ellen." In Boston and San Francisco, ratings reached 45 percent. ABC estimated 42-million people watched all or some of the show.

This compares to "Ellen's" average rating of 9.6 with a 16 share. The show had sagged to 37th place in the ratings this season, with only two-thirds the audience it had two

"ABC was very, very successful in positioning this as not simply a gay television show but as a tele-vision event," said Betsy Frank of Zenith Media.

It was ABC's highest-rated program of the year.

ABC declined to say how much it was charging for commercials on the show, but people familiar with the matter said some commercials were sold for $300,000 to $350,000 for 30 seconds.

One commercial for a home HIV test was tailored for "Ellen." Home Access Health Corp.'s spot ran in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Washington, San Francisco and Baltimore.

It began with the text, "Hey everybody, we came out this year, Cintoria McKoy said her friend Michelle Bennett rarely spoke up, and instead made herself known by what she did, rather than what she said. Bennett's friends were taught a lesson by her reserved, quiet ways, McKov said.

"From Michelle, I learned that the world needs quiet people," she said.

"Quiet people say so much that when you take the time to listen, you realize how important they are.'

Friends of Michelle Bennett gathered Friday evening in the Union Little Theatre to pay their respects and to remember her life. The event was presented by Zeta Phi Beta sorority.

At K-State, Bennett studied interior design, was a member of Zeta Phi Beta, Student Senate, Black Student Union, Human Ecology Club and the National Organization of Black Architecture Students. She moved to New York City to live with her aunt and study at the Parsons School of Design.

In March, she disappeared. Police began their search, only to find her body a month later in the East River.

Aaron Otto, former student body vice president, took the stage after McKoy and remembered Bennett as a student senator two years ago. He said Bennett put him at ease right away at the first Student Senate meeting he attended.

"Her actions and her deeds spoke louder than most people's words," he Cosby's Jan. 19 performance was rescheduled after his son, Ennis, was shot and killed on Jan. 16. Almost four months later, Cosby came to Manhattan to muse on fatherhood for a nearly full Bramlage Coliseum, concentrating on stories of his daughter's college career and his own upbringing.

He remembered his father, and the no-nonsense way he raised his sons: "My father had two names for us - Jesus Christ and Dammit. I was Dammit and my brother was Jesus Christ." But times have changed,

KBI posting PHIL KELLUM

The Kansas Bureau of Investigations recently began posting its list of registered sexual offenders on the World Wide

There has already been a mistake made in the posting.

Dennis Cox, 44, was a registered sex offender who lived in Manhattan at 302 Redbud in the Redbud Estates Trailer Park. According to the law, sex offenders are supposed to notify state officials when they

Last week, they found out about the posting on the Web

"It was a definite shock," Mike Lumpkins, 22, said. "I was mowing the grass and my wife was in the garden, and people were staring, when they would usually just wave and drive by."

Lumpkins said that a printout of the list was also on a bulletin board by the trailer park's mailboxes.

"I was pretty upset, so I called KBI and talked to Mary Ann Howerton, and she acted like it was no big deal," Lumpkins said.

Howerton is the manager of the crime data information center at the Topeka She said the KBI only updated the list every month or so, Lumpkins said.

After calling the KBI, Lumpkins called the Riley County Police Department, which agreed with him that it was a dangerous situation. They called the KBI and got the posting removed from the Web site. "We had threatening calls, and when

Members of the Fairchild-Denison Neighborhood Association met with Jack Messer, Manhattan city engineer, to discuss the neighborhood's acceptance of summer improvements to control a speeding problem on Denison Avenue.

A group of 30 people met at the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity house Sunday night for the meet-

Denison Avenue is on the city's maintenance schedule to have curbs and gutters repaired, Messer said. While construction is going on, this would be a good time to make further improvements to Denison.

"Denison Avenue from Anderson to Leavenworth is an area that in our mind could have a speeding problem," Messer said.

The consent of the group was to do something about the speeding problem, and Messer proposed several solutions.

Denison Avenue north of Anderson is a high traffic area, Tim Lindemuth, neighborhood association co-chairperson, said. To avoid traffic lights, it is easier to go through the residential area of Denison south of Anderson.

The first and most favored solution by Messer was the use of traffic circles at the intersections in question.
